Lee would like to see if you would be available to meet on judges tomorrow afternoon before 4 pm or after 5:30.

Also we need to have a courtesy visit with Dan Bryant, any reason why we should not have them join us.

Manny: I have just started a new job here as Staff Secretary. I therefore cannot make it to the meeting and I am of course transitioning out of the judges docket. Wendy as always will handle the Leg side on judges, Goeglein has Liaison, Ashley Snee has press, and David Leitch will be your contact in counsel's office. He is at 456-6111. I'm still here though and of course always happy to talk. I very much enjoyed and appreciated all of our joint work together on this important issue and look forward to continuing to support the effort, albeit in a different capacity. I'll see or talk to you soon.

I think it's too late to worry about leaks. As far as I can tell this has become an open secret. In the past two days I've received calls from Rachel Brand (who said she heard it from Dan Bryant), Manny Miranda, Rena Comisac, and others saying they'd heard "the news" and asking me to confirm it, which I did not. Don't know who's talking, but it's bound to come out, which is why we're working on trying to get our ducks in a row for next week.

I think it's too late to worry about leaks. As far as I can tell this has become an open secret. In the past two days I've received calls from Rachel Brand (who said she heard it from Dan Bryant), Manny Miranda, Rena Comisac, and others saying they'd heard "the news" and asking me to confirm it, which I did not. Don't know who's talking, but it's bound to come out, which is why we're working on trying to get our ducks in a row for next week.

Brett -- I'm inclined to disagree with Wendy's assessment (I've never met Miranda and it would seem useful to open the line of communication), but she's the expert. What do you think?

Lee would like to see if you would be available to meet on judges tomorrow afternoon before 4 pm or after 5:30.

Also we need to have a courtesy visit with Dan Bryant, any reason why we should not have them join us.

Dear Shane,

Tracy Young in WH Communications suggested I contact you regarding a request for the President to write a thank you note to a fifth grade class. One of the students in the class, Manny (along with his mother, Monica Mims), met the President during a housing event in Phoenix, AZ and had intended to give the President a handful of letters written by his class. Terrell Halaska, Special Assistant to the President for Domestic Policy, accepted the letters on behalf of the President, and told Manny that she would make sure the President got the letters. Today, I am sending a formal request and the letters to Blake Gottesman asking the President to write a quick note of thanks to Manny and his class. Tracy suggested that I give you a heads up and ask that this request get special consideration since the President has met with this little boy. Please let me know if you need me to provide you with any other information, and if you have a suggestions as to how I can fulfill this request.

Thank you in advance for your consideration.
Best,
Sandy

I think it's too late to worry about leaks. As far as I can tell this has become an open secret. In the past two days I've received calls from Rachel Brand (who said she heard it from Dan Bryant), Manny Miranda, Rena Comisac, and others saying they'd heard "the news" and asking me to confirm it, which I did not. Don't know who's talking, but it's bound to come out, which is why we're working on trying to get our ducks in a row for next week.

Wendy as always will handle the Leg side on judges, Goeglein has Liaison, Ashley Snee has press, and David Leitch will be your contact in counsel's office. He is at 456-6111. I'm still here though and of course always happy to talk. I very much enjoyed and appreciated all of our joint work together on this important issue and look forward to continuing to support the effort, albeit in a different capacity. Brett/Wendy

Lee would like to see if you would be available to meet on judges tomorrow afternoon before 4 pm or after 5:30.

Also we need to have a courtesy visit with Dan Bryant, any reason why we should not have them join us.

The number for David is a non-working number. Can you send me his email.

Manny: I have just started a new job here as Staff Secretary. I therefore cannot make it to the meeting and I am of course transitioning out of the judges docket. Wendy as always will handle the Leg side on judges, Goeglein has Liaison, Ashley Snee has press, and David Leitch will be your contact in counsel's office. He is at 456-6111. I'm still here though and of course always happy to talk. I very much enjoyed and appreciated all of our joint work together on this important issue and look forward to continuing to support the effort, albeit in a different capacity. I'll see or talk to you soon.

Brett/Wendy

Lee would like to see if you would be available to meet on judges tomorrow afternoon before 4 pm or after 5:30.

Also we need to have a courtesy visit with Dan Bryant, any reason why we should not have them join us.

Wendy -- I've never met him, and it seems to me it would be a good idea to open up a line of communication at some point. If this isn't the right time/place, that's fine, but I don't want to blow him off entirely.

Manny: I have just started a new job here as Staff Secretary. I therefore cannot make it to the meeting and I am of course transitioning out of the judges docket. Wendy as always will handle the Leg side on judges, Goeglein has Liaison, Ashley Snee has press, and David Leitch will be your contact in counsel's office. He is at 456-6111. I'm still here though and of course always happy to talk. I very much enjoyed and appreciated all of our joint work together on this important issue and look forward to continuing to support the effort, albeit in a different capacity. I'll see or talk to you soon.

Brett, I sensed it. Will miss you in the trenches. But not goodbye.

The number for David is a non-working number. Can you send me his email.

Manny: I have just started a new job here as Staff Secretary. I therefore cannot make it to the meeting and I am of course transitioning out of the judges docket. Wendy as always will handle the Leg side on judges, Goeglein has Liaison, Ashley Snee has press, and David Leitch will be your contact in counsel's office. He is at 456-6111. I'm still here though and of course always happy to talk. I very much enjoyed and appreciated all of our joint work together on this important issue and look forward to continuing to support the effort, albeit in a different capacity. I'll see or talk to you soon.

Lee would like to see if you would be available to meet on judges tomorrow afternoon before 4 pm or after 5:30.

Also we need to have a courtesy visit with Dan Bryant, any reason why we should not have them join us.

Wendy -- I've never met him, and it seems to me it would be a good idea to open up a line of communication at some point. If this isn't the right time/place, that's fine, but I don't want to blow him off entirely.

The discharge effort is over....it was not expected to be effective. It was used to raise the profile of the nominees and the situation. The next step will be to push for a hearing for the group...letter from Frist to Hatch requesting hearing is expected soon. Thanks.

Wendy, I have received voice mail messages from 2 of the Michigan 4, asking for help in understanding where this discharge effort stands today. Can you give me an update by phone (6-2318) or e-mail? Thanks.

Democrats Focus On Ex-Starr Aide (Roll Call)

By Paul Kane
Roll Call, April 26, 2004

Setting the stage for the Senate's latest judicial battle, Judiciary Committee Democrats are gearing up for a nomination hearing Tuesday by preparing a line of questioning that could encompass a decade's worth of Washington scandals.

Most importantly, Democrats plan to question Brett Kavanaugh, a former aide in the White House Counsel's office, about whether he or anyone else in the Bush administration saw any of the more than 4,000 Democratic memos that were taken off committee computers in 2001 and 2002.

Kavanaugh, whose main responsibility in the counsel's office was overseeing judicial nominations, previously worked in the Independent Counsel's office under Kenneth Starr and authored key portions of the Starr report, which called for Bill Clinton's impeachment in 1998. That period with Starr has led Democrats to express concerns about Kavanaugh's views on privacy and prosecutorial conduct in his bid to land a lifetime seat on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit.

"There will be a ton of questions," said Sen. Dick Durbin (D-Ill.), a Judiciary member. "He opens so many doors into areas of inquiry."

Kavanaugh's confirmation prospects appear very slim at the outset given the current blockade Democrats have imposed on all judicial nominees sent up by President Bush in the wake of the president's decision to give recess appointments to a pair of controversial circuit court judges. That impasse has shown no signs of ending as Democrats continue to demand Bush promise in writing that no more judges will be given recess appointments, a request that Senate Republicans are adamantly opposed to.

But Kavanaugh's hearing could spark the most political fireworks of any judicial nominee so far this year because the unique perches he's occupied throughout his relatively brief legal career have put him at the center of some grueling partisan fights.

From Starr to Monica Lewinsky to Manuel Miranda - the former GOP staffer at the center of the improperly accessed Democratic memos - Kavanaugh has connections directly or indirectly to a host of scandal figures who have irked Democrats in recent years.

Republicans defend Kavanaugh, now a close Bush aide serving as White House staff secretary, as a sharp legal mind who has been awaiting a hearing since last summer.

"He's certainly waited there long enough. Frankly, he's a fine, fine man," said Judiciary Chairman Orrin Hatch (R-Utah).

But Democrats question the amount of legal background Kavanaugh, 39, has to qualify him for a seat on the D.C. Circuit, often considered the second-most important court in the nation because of its wide-ranging jurisdiction. They are expected to argue that Kavanaugh's experience is predominantly as a partisan lawyer who has been, as one Democratic aide put it, "a guy who was raised at the right-wing nipple."

Sen. Charles Schumer (D-N.Y.), who has proven to be one of the toughest inquisitors of Bush nominees, is expected to be the lead questioner for Democrats at the Kavanaugh hearing, as he has done for other high-profile D.C. Circuit nominees including the 2002 hearing on Miguel Estrada.

Most recently Kavanaugh worked for two years in the White House Counsel's office, helping select and prepare nominees. Throughout a three-and-a-half-month investigation by the Senate Sergeant-at-Arms Office, Democrats contended that some aides in the White House Counsel's office must have seen or been briefed on the contents of their memos that were taken.

In late February, Judiciary Democrats sent White House Counsel Alberto Gonzales a letter pointedly asking whether he or any of his staffers had seen the memos and requested a listing of any contacts his staff had with Miranda or outside conservative groups that worked on the nomination issue.

Gonzales declined to answer which of his aides had contacts with Miranda and, in a brief letter in early March, said he was not aware of any credible allegation his staff had seen the memos and therefore had not investigated the matter. Democrats were infuriated by the letter and are anxious to pointedly ask Kavanaugh about his contacts with Miranda and other conservative activists.

Some Judiciary Republicans have supported the Democratic call for an independent-minded U.S. attorney to investigate whether any crimes were committed in taking the documents, and say questioning Kavanaugh about it won't be a bad thing. "I don't think it's an unfair line of questioning," said Sen. Lindsey Graham (R-S.C.).

Kavanaugh's job required that he deal with individuals such as Miranda, who in 2001 and 2002 worked at Judiciary, and outside groups such as the Committee for Justice. In June 2003 Kavanaugh was one of dozens of key Bush administration and Senate Republican staffers to attend a fundraiser by the Committee for Justice at which George P. Bush, the president's nephew, was the keynote speaker.

While in the counsel's office Kavanaugh was also at the center of a few other decisions, including one to restrict access to presidential documents traditionally released after 12 years. Democratic staff said this was a bit of legal irony since, while working for Starr, Kavanaugh spent a lot of time and effort trying to unseal documents on which the Clinton administration claimed executive privilege.

His connections to Starr are an obvious source of anguish for Democrats. "Having been Ken Starr's right-hand man, he comes in raising a lot of questions on our side," Durbin said.

Graham, however, defended Kavanaugh's experience with Starr. "The fact that he worked for Judge Starr is not a disqualifier for me," said Graham, who was one of the impeachment managers as a Member of the House.

Kavanaugh first worked for Starr in the Solicitor General's office at the end of the first Bush administration. When Starr became independent counsel in 1994, Kavanaugh joined him. He did a brief stint with Starr's old law firm, Kirkland & Ellis, in 1997 and rejoined the Office of the Independent Counsel in 1998 when the Whitewater probe turned into the Lewinsky investigation regarding perjury and obstruction of justice.

After leaving Starr's legal team in 1998, Kavanaugh rejoined Kirkland, and then joined the White House Counsel's office in early 2001. Currently serving as staff secretary, Kavanaugh is in charge of all documents that Bush sees and is always close to the president.

In a December New York Times profile of life on the Bush family ranch in Crawford, Texas, Kavanaugh was described as one of three close aides to Bush who live in a "fraternity-house existence" in a double-wide trailer on the ranch.

Statement of Dr. Frist on Freeing the Michigan 4 , July 9, 2003

“On Monday I took the rare but not unprecedented step to discharge the Judiciary Committee of the four nominations pending to fill the Michigan seats to the 6th Circuit Court of Appeals that serves the people I represent in Tennessee.

I took that step because the people of the 6th Circuit called upon us to act. I received a remarkable letter from 6th Circuit scholars outlining just how the delay of these nominees is hurting the people of Michigan, Ohio, Kentucky, and Tennessee. Last week, the legislature of Michigan introduced a concurrent resolution asking the Senate to act.

I took that step because the Committee has sought to satisfy the two Michigan senators under its traditional practices, but this has gone on for over one year for all four nominees. All 4 of the vacancies in question have been deemed judicial emergencies by the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts.

The vacancy rate in the Sixth Circuit is 25% even while the Sixth Circuit is the third busiest court of appeals in the country. The Sixth Circuit is eleventh in the timeliness of its disposition of cases. Eleventh. Only one Circuit takes longer to issue its opinions.

I believe it is simply not fair to the individual nominees, to the President, or to the people of the Sixth Circuit to allow this obstruction to abide. And if the Committee will not act on these nominees, then the majority of the Senate will as the Constitution intended.

I should note that Chairman Hatch has the authority to ignore the lack of support by the Michigan senators because the so-called blue slip has never been dispositive when it comes to Circuit nominees. Deference always goes to the president on such nominees. Negative blue slips can always be overcome by a record that the home state senators were consulted. That record exists here, in my view. “

Earth to Second Circuit: We're at War
Wall Street Journal Op-Ed

'How can the President of the United States detain a U.S. citizen on American soil and hold him without charge and without a lawyer, perhaps for years?' This is the question that apparently boggled the judicial mind in the Second Circuit's recent decision directing that Jose Padilla be turned loose by the U.S. military or surrendered to civilian prosecutors in the criminal justice system. Given the near certainty of further review by the full Second Circuit or the Supreme Court, the question remains important.

It also has an easy answer. The key fact is not that Jose Padilla is a U.S. citizen. It is that Mr. Padilla, a.k.a. Abdullah al-Muhajir, was an al Qaeda agent who worked directly with terrorist mastermind Abu Zubaydah to plan a dirty bomb attack on a major American city. He was captured in Chicago-O'Hare airport on his way back from Pakistan to scout potential targets. He was, in short, an active enemy fighter making war on the U.S. and its citizens, just as the 19 hijackers who attacked New York, Washington, and Pennsylvania were.

A person making war on the U.S. who seeks to slaughter thousands of our citizens in the streets of our cities must face our military, not our judges. Such a person, U.S. citizen or not, is not a common criminal. He is an avowed enemy of our system of laws and government and a mortal threat to our way of life. The powers implicated are not the president's law enforcement powers but his war powers. Until the Second Circuit's ruling earlier this month, it had never been thought that the president, in the exercise of his war powers, could not use force against such a person on American soil. Indeed, it would have come as a great surprise to both Abraham Lincoln and Franklin Roosevelt to learn that the president lacks the power to use the military to protect the nation from citizen enemy combatants as well as foreign ones.

The president's power as Commander-in-Chief to do what is necessary to protect the nation in time of war is, as it must be, exceptionally flexible and robust. He can engage and subdue the enemy in any way he sees fit. There is no judicial check on his authority in this vital and sensitive area because there cannot be: as the Framers expressly recognized in the Federalist Papers, the "[d]ecision, activity, secrecy, and dispatch" that are the hallmarks of unitary executive power are "essential to the protection of the community against foreign attacks."

Under the laws of war, the legitimate use of force has always included the power to capture and detain enemy combatants for the duration of the conflict, without charges and without lawyers, for the purpose of incapacitating them, gleaning actionable intelligence, and protecting the nation's security. This power is no less essential when applied to terrorists captured on our shores, even if they happen to be U.S. citizens. As the Supreme Court recognized more than 50 years ago in unanimously upholding President Roosevelt's capture on U.S. soil of a U.S. citizen Nazi saboteur, "[c]itizens who associate themselves with the military arm of the enemy . . . and enter this country bent on hostile acts are enemy belligerents" and may be treated as such.

The real-world consequences of the recent ruling to the contrary could not be more dangerous or debilitating, especially in this war, in which our enemies are attempting to carry out attacks within the U.S. and conceal themselves among the civilian population in order to do so. Under the court's ruling, the only option for dealing with an American citizen engaged in terrorist activity on our soil, at least absent further legislation, is the civilian justice system.

In practical terms, this means that citizen terrorists may be entirely beyond the government's reach. Never mind the kinds of serious problems that have thus far impeded the successful criminal prosecution of Zacarias Moussaoui, in many cases, no traditional criminal case could be brought at all against an al Qaeda agent found in the U.S. At the point of apprehension, we may not know what a terrorist is planning, his plans may not yet have ripened into prosecutable crimes, or the evidence we have against him may be derived from intelligence sources that cannot meet the normal standards of admissibility in a criminal courtroom. If military detention is not an option, and, for one or more of these reasons, a suspected terrorist cannot be charged with a crime, he must be let go.

Equally alarming, even when a criminal case might be made, the government will be unable to successfully interrogate and gather intelligence from al Qaeda recruits among our citizens. The purpose of military detentions is incapacitation and prevention, not prosecution; to disrupt planned attacks and dismantle terrorist networks, it is vital that the military be able to interrogate enemy fighters on our soil and learn everything they know as quickly as possible. That cannot happen if, as the Second Circuit has ruled, these fighters must be arrested by civilian law enforcement, given Miranda warnings, provided with a lawyer, and charged with a crime or held as a material witness.

Granting immunity from military detention to American agents of al Qaeda captured in the U.S. is thus a potentially crippling disservice to the war effort. If left undisturbed, the Second Circuit ruling would leave exceptionally dangerous individuals in our communities and reduce our ability to prevent further attacks on U.S. soil. It also creates shockingly perverse incentives for al Qaeda to do precisely what we are most desperate to prevent: recruit U.S. citizens to carry out acts of terrorism here.

Despite its protestations to the contrary, the Second Circuit must have doubted whether we are really at war. At a minimum, it seriously misunderstood the war's essential character. The court repeatedly described American soil as distinct from a battlefield and said that Mr. Padilla was "outside a zone of combat" and was not "actively engaged in armed conflict against the United States" when he was apprehended in O'Hare airport. By that logic, neither were the 19 hijackers as they walked through Logan and Dulles Airports on the morning of Sept. 11, 2001. If 9/11 did not illustrate that nicely dressed al Qaeda in our airports are enemy fighters on the battlefields of this new war, what did it teach us?

Mr. Berenson, a Washington lawyer, was associate White House counsel to President Bush.

Statement of Dr. Frist on Freeing the Michigan 4 , July 9, 2003

“On Monday I took the rare but not unprecedented step to discharge the Judiciary Committee of the four nominations pending to fill the Michigan seats to the 6th Circuit Court of Appeals that serves the people I represent in Tennessee.

I took that step because the people of the 6th Circuit called upon us to act. I received a remarkable letter from 6th Circuit scholars outlining just how the delay of these nominees is hurting the people of Michigan, Ohio, Kentucky, and Tennessee. Last week, the legislature of Michigan introduced a concurrent resolution asking the Senate to act.

I took that step because the Committee has sought to satisfy the two Michigan senators under its traditional practices, but this has gone on for over one year for all four nominees. All 4 of the vacancies in question have been deemed judicial emergencies by the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts.

The vacancy rate in the Sixth Circuit is 25% even while the Sixth Circuit is the third busiest court of appeals in the country. The Sixth Circuit is eleventh in the timeliness of its disposition of cases. Eleventh. Only one Circuit takes longer to issue its opinions.

I believe it is simply not fair to the individual nominees, to the President, or to the people of the Sixth Circuit to allow this obstruction to abide. And if the Committee will not act on these nominees, then the majority of the Senate will as the Constitution intended.

I should note that Chairman Hatch has the authority to ignore the lack of support by the Michigan senators because the so-called blue slip has never been dispositive when it comes to Circuit nominees. Deference always goes to the president on such nominees. Negative blue slips can always be overcome by a record that the home state senators were consulted. That record exists here, in my view. “

Mr. President, reserving the right to object, this nomination for the Sixth Circuit, and the others that will be made by the majority leader, have not had the benefit of any hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee. I believe that hearing should take place before a lifetime appointment is given to any person to the Circuit Court. So, on behalf of Senators CARL LEVIN and DEBBIE STABENOW of Michigan, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I now send a resolution to discharge from the Judiciary Committee the nomination of Susan Bieke Nielson of Michigan to be a U.S. circuit judge for the Sixth Circuit, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, for the same reasons, I object.

Opinion Columnist Quin Hillyer

07/16/03

Using pilfered documents, Democrats on the U.S. Senate Judiciary Committee are making a last-minute attempt to derail the nomination of Alabama Attorney General Bill Pryor for a seat on the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Pryor's first problem is that, as an elected official and a participant in the political process, he has helped raise campaign contributions for his political party. How shocking. Next we'll discover that senators, too, raise money.

Pryor's second problem is that he answered a written question too precisely. This was a bad mistake. Faced with an open-ended question, Pryor should have made clear that his answer was not definitive. This he failed to do.

What this all involves is Pryor's role in helping found a group called the Republican Attorneys General Association (RAGA). U.S. Sen. Russ Feingold, D-Wis., the famed campaign finance reformer, asked Pryor at his June 11 committee hearing if a certain scenario, involving a donation to RAGA from a corporation that might one day be investigated by a state attorney general, would present at least the appearance of conflict of interest given your role in RAGA?

Feingold's question was purely hypothetical. Pryor answered that in no instance has he solicited funds from a company under investigation or otherwise failed in ensuring that the law is enforced against any potential contributor.

In a written follow-up, Feingold asked: Are you aware of any companies in the State of Alabama that are or were members of RAGA? Were you involved in the solicitation of any of these companies? If so, which companies?

To be a member of RAGA, as Pryor earlier had explained, required a contribution of at least $5,000. Pryor also had previously explained that at the request of RAGA's staff, he did make some fundraising calls, but that the Republican National Committee kept all records of who donated when -- and that the RNC co-mingled RAGA funds with money for Republican governors and other state officials.

Pryor's answer to Feingold's question about Alabama companies was as follows: I am unaware of any Alabama companies being members of RAGA.

Fast-forward to yesterday. That's when committee staff contacted two former RAGA staffers, Ben Dupuy in Washington, D.C., and Claire Austin in Montgomery. They played phone tag with Austin, but were able to interview Dupuy. He said they asked if Pryor made fundraising calls to companies in Alabama. He said he told them Austin would know, because she was the one who handled fundraising.

Dupuy also said the process was mostly staff-driven. Documents show that RAGA staff had to plead with Republican attorneys general to secure a random hour on their schedules to make such calls. It's not as if every AG kept a record, of who the RAGA members were, in their wallets, Dupuy told me.

What was the point of all this? Apparently, to find some way to read certain documents as if to show that Pryor should have been aware that Alabama companies are RAGA members.

Would Bill Pryor know specifically who were members of RAGA? Claire Austin repeated a question of mine, rhetorically. I kinda doubt it. As a staff person, of course I remember all that stuff. ... That's what I did for a living.

Nevertheless, the committee has documents showing that Bill Pryor did ask some Alabama companies to contribute to RAGA. And some companies with Alabama subsidiaries, such as the Southern Company out of Atlanta (parent to Alabama Power), did become RAGA members.

Austin said the only Southern Company people she remembers attending RAGA events were out of their Washington office.

As for conflicts of interest, Austin said that Bill would not make any calls to the Microsoft people because there was pending litigation nationwide. Pryor was that way about tobacco companies, too. In short, Pryor avoided any potential ethical conflicts that he saw.

Still, a friendly critic could say that Pryor's answer to Feingold wasn't good enough. Yes, he was unaware that any Alabama-based companies were members. (It's still not clear whether any were.) But he perhaps should have said that certainly Alabama companies -- ones not under any investigation -- were asked to join, and that some may well have contributed at or below the membership level. Not, as Jerry Seinfeld would say, that there's anything wrong with that.

By this time, the committee Democrats were searching for a potential reason to assume that Pryor might have known that somewhere along the line there may have been an appearance of a conflict of interest. Obviously, that's about four removes from anything that should rightly disqualify a judicial nominee.

But what led them to this trail of questions is more interesting. Those documents they had -- documents that gave them more information about RAGA than Pryor himself has access to -- came from a former secretary of Claire Austin's by the name of Kelly Foradori. Foradori stopped working for Austin at the end of 1999, after helping with RAGA's first-ever major fundraiser (on Kiawah Island, S.C.).

Austin says she remembers confronting Foradori then to ask if Foradori retained any documents. Turns out, her suspicions were right. Foradori e-mailed those documents to the committee. Most were memos from Austin to various donors. Only a few mention Pryor. But they do show names and affiliations of people who were scheduled to attend some RAGA events.

Foradori's motive in all this is unclear. When reached by cell phone yesterday, before I could even identify myself, she told me: I don't have any comment for you, and please do not call my cell phone again.

What is known is that Foradori was a longtime employee of lobbyist Lanny Young -- and a highly paid one at that, said Austin. Austin briefly had a business with Young, and she said Foradori came with Young (already making what for a clerical employee was a hefty salary) when Austin and Young joined forces.

Lanny Young last month pleaded guilty to bribing Nick Bailey, a top aide to former Alabama Gov. Don Siegelman. Bill Pryor's office is working in conjunction with federal Justice Department officials in the ongoing investigation involving Young, Bailey and others in the Siegelman orbit.

Now Foradori, at least at one time a close associate and employee of Young's, has sent Austin's RAGA documents -- retained against Austin's wishes more than three years ago -- to committee staffers representing U.S. Sen. Ted Kennedy, D-Mass., a leading Pryor opponent.

I think I smell a dirty political payback for an attorney general doing his job, which is prosecuting people for crimes.

But having looked at those documents myself, I see no smoking gun -- nor, for that matter, any gunpowder or bullets or even anything approaching a crime or ethical transgression, that would rightly block Pryor's nomination. Because when it comes to following the law, Bill Pryor is always precise.

Sometimes to his own political detriment.

Statement of Dr. Frist on Freeing the Michigan 4 , July 9, 2003

“On Monday I took the rare but not unprecedented step to discharge the Judiciary Committee of the four nominations pending to fill the Michigan seats to the 6th Circuit Court of Appeals that serves the people I represent in Tennessee.

I took that step because the people of the 6th Circuit called upon us to act. I received a remarkable letter from 6th Circuit scholars outlining just how the delay of these nominees is hurting the people of Michigan, Ohio, Kentucky, and Tennessee. Last week, the legislature of Michigan introduced a concurrent resolution asking the Senate to act.

I took that step because the Committee has sought to satisfy the two Michigan senators under its traditional practices, but this has gone on for over one year for all four nominees. All 4 of the vacancies in question have been deemed judicial emergencies by the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts.

The vacancy rate in the Sixth Circuit is 25% even while the Sixth Circuit is the third busiest court of appeals in the country. The Sixth Circuit is eleventh in the timeliness of its disposition of cases. Eleventh. Only one Circuit takes longer to issue its opinions.

I believe it is simply not fair to the individual nominees, to the President, or to the people of the Sixth Circuit to allow this obstruction to abide. And if the Committee will not act on these nominees, then the majority of the Senate will as the Constitution intended.

I should note that Chairman Hatch has the authority to ignore the lack of support by the Michigan senators because the so-called blue slip has never been dispositive when it comes to Circuit nominees. Deference always goes to the president on such nominees. Negative blue slips can always be overcome by a record that the home state senators were consulted. That record exists here, in my view. “

The discharge effort is over....it was not expected to be effective. It was used to raise the profile of the nominees and the situation. The next step will be to push for a hearing for the group...letter from Frist to Hatch requesting hearing is expected soon. Thanks.

Democrats Focus On Ex-Starr Aide (Roll Call)

By Paul Kane
Roll Call, April 26, 2004

Setting the stage for the Senate's latest judicial battle, Judiciary Committee Democrats are gearing up for a nomination hearing Tuesday by preparing a line of questioning that could encompass a decade's worth of Washington scandals.

Most importantly, Democrats plan to question Brett Kavanaugh, a former aide in the White House Counsel's office, about whether he or anyone else in the Bush administration saw any of the more than 4,000 Democratic memos that were taken off committee computers in 2001 and 2002.

Kavanaugh, whose main responsibility in the counsel's office was overseeing judicial nominations, previously worked in the Independent Counsel's office under Kenneth Starr and authored key portions of the Starr report, which called for Bill Clinton's impeachment in 1998. That period with Starr has led Democrats to express concerns about Kavanaugh's views on privacy and prosecutorial conduct in his bid to land a lifetime seat on the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit.

"There will be a ton of questions," said Sen. Dick Durbin (D-Ill.), a Judiciary member. "He opens so many doors into areas of inquiry."

Kavanaugh's confirmation prospects appear very slim at the outset given the current blockade Democrats have imposed on all judicial nominees sent up by President Bush in the wake of the president's decision to give recess appointments to a pair of controversial circuit court judges. That impasse has shown no signs of ending as Democrats continue to demand Bush promise in writing that no more judges will be given recess appointments, a request that Senate Republicans are adamantly opposed to.

But Kavanaugh's hearing could spark the most political fireworks of any judicial nominee so far this year because the unique perches he's occupied throughout his relatively brief legal career have put him at the center of some grueling partisan fights.

From Starr to Monica Lewinsky to Manuel Miranda - the former GOP staffer at the center of the improperly accessed Democratic memos - Kavanaugh has connections directly or indirectly to a host of scandal figures who have irked Democrats in recent years.

Republicans defend Kavanaugh, now a close Bush aide serving as White House staff secretary, as a sharp legal mind who has been awaiting a hearing since last summer.

"He's certainly waited there long enough. Frankly, he's a fine, fine man," said Judiciary Chairman Orrin Hatch (R-Utah).

But Democrats question the amount of legal background Kavanaugh, 39, has to qualify him for a seat on the D.C. Circuit, often considered the second-most important court in the nation because of its wide-ranging jurisdiction. They are expected to argue that Kavanaugh's experience is predominantly as a partisan lawyer who has been, as one Democratic aide put it, "a guy who was raised at the right-wing nipple."

Sen. Charles Schumer (D-N.Y.), who has proven to be one of the toughest inquisitors of Bush nominees, is expected to be the lead questioner for Democrats at the Kavanaugh hearing, as he has done for other high-profile D.C. Circuit nominees including the 2002 hearing on Miguel Estrada.

Most recently Kavanaugh worked for two years in the White House Counsel's office, helping select and prepare nominees. Throughout a three-and-a-half-month investigation by the Senate Sergeant-at-Arms Office, Democrats contended that some aides in the White House Counsel's office must have seen or been briefed on the contents of their memos that were taken.

In late February, Judiciary Democrats sent White House Counsel Alberto Gonzales a letter pointedly asking whether he or any of his staffers had seen the memos and requested a listing of any contacts his staff had with Miranda or outside conservative groups that worked on the nomination issue.

Gonzales declined to answer which of his aides had contacts with Miranda and, in a brief letter in early March, said he was not aware of any credible allegation his staff had seen the memos and therefore had not investigated the matter. Democrats were infuriated by the letter and are anxious to pointedly ask Kavanaugh about his contacts with Miranda and other conservative activists.

Some Judiciary Republicans have supported the Democratic call for an independent-minded U.S. attorney to investigate whether any crimes were committed in taking the documents, and say questioning Kavanaugh about it won't be a bad thing. "I don't think it's an unfair line of questioning," said Sen. Lindsey Graham (R-S.C.).

Kavanaugh's job required that he deal with individuals such as Miranda, who in 2001 and 2002 worked at Judiciary, and outside groups such as the Committee for Justice. In June 2003 Kavanaugh was one of dozens of key Bush administration and Senate Republican staffers to attend a fundraiser by the Committee for Justice at which George P. Bush, the president's nephew, was the keynote speaker.

While in the counsel's office Kavanaugh was also at the center of a few other decisions, including one to restrict access to presidential documents traditionally released after 12 years. Democratic staff said this was a bit of legal irony since, while working for Starr, Kavanaugh spent a lot of time and effort trying to unseal documents on which the Clinton administration claimed executive privilege.

His connections to Starr are an obvious source of anguish for Democrats. "Having been Ken Starr's right-hand man, he comes in raising a lot of questions on our side," Durbin said.

Graham, however, defended Kavanaugh's experience with Starr. "The fact that he worked for Judge Starr is not a disqualifier for me," said Graham, who was one of the impeachment managers as a Member of the House.

Kavanaugh first worked for Starr in the Solicitor General's office at the end of the first Bush administration. When Starr became independent counsel in 1994, Kavanaugh joined him. He did a brief stint with Starr's old law firm, Kirkland & Ellis, in 1997 and rejoined the Office of the Independent Counsel in 1998 when the Whitewater probe turned into the Lewinsky investigation regarding perjury and obstruction of justice.

After leaving Starr's legal team in 1998, Kavanaugh rejoined Kirkland, and then joined the White House Counsel's office in early 2001. Currently serving as staff secretary, Kavanaugh is in charge of all documents that Bush sees and is always close to the president.

In a December New York Times profile of life on the Bush family ranch in Crawford, Texas, Kavanaugh was described as one of three close aides to Bush who live in a "fraternity-house existence" in a double-wide trailer on the ranch.

From one of the most important small papers in the country. The Manchester Union Leader. This may be the first editorial on judges in that paper and in the State.

Judging judges: Conservatives, Catholics needn't apply

THERE IS an advertisement making the rounds in some states with the headline "Catholics need not apply." It was funded by the Catholic Ave Maria List, and it suggests that U.S. Senate Democrats have set a standard for the federal bench that would forbid Catholics from becoming federal judges. It has struck a chord.

Democratic senators are opposing President Bush's nomination of Alabama Attorney General William Pryor to the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals because of his "deeply held" belief that abortion is wrong.

In opposing Pryor's nomination on the grounds that he believes strongly that abortion is immoral, the Democrats are doing nothing more than playing sleazy partisan politics. The truth is, they will find any reason to oppose any Bush nominee whose appointment they think they can derail. Pryor's stance on abortion happens to be the most expedient excuse to fight his nomination.

But a funny thing happened on the way to the filibuster, which New York Sen. Charles Schumer said this week would occur when Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist calls for a vote of cloture on Pryor's nomination today. Republicans countered that opposing Pryor for his views on abortion means that no one who adheres to Catholic doctrine can become a federal judge.

Democrats have been unable to defend themselves against this charge of anti-Catholic bias. Attempting to defend themselves, they have given further evidence that the charge is true. Sen. Dick Durbin, D-Ill., was quoted in The Hill newspaper yesterday as saying, "Religion is the last refuge of extremists." That fairly well sums up the view of the Senate's leading Democrats.

Senate Republicans, who respect tradition, allowed President Clinton to fill the federal courts with liberal judges. They delayed votes on some nominees, but they never filibustered one. Senate Democrats, who are willing to trample on any tradition if that advances their political agenda, are taking the extraordinary step of filibustering President Bush's judicial nominees only because those nominees are not liberal.

What Senate Democrats are doing to the judicial nominations process is a disgrace to their party and to the country.

Statement of Dr. Frist on Freeing the Michigan 4 , July 9, 2003

“On Monday I took the rare but not unprecedented step to discharge the Judiciary Committee of the four nominations pending to fill the Michigan seats to the 6th Circuit Court of Appeals that serves the people I represent in Tennessee.

I took that step because the people of the 6th Circuit called upon us to act. I received a remarkable letter from 6th Circuit scholars outlining just how the delay of these nominees is hurting the people of Michigan, Ohio, Kentucky, and Tennessee. Last week, the legislature of Michigan introduced a concurrent resolution asking the Senate to act.

I took that step because the Committee has sought to satisfy the two Michigan senators under its traditional practices, but this has gone on for over one year for all four nominees. All 4 of the vacancies in question have been deemed judicial emergencies by the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts.

The vacancy rate in the Sixth Circuit is 25% even while the Sixth Circuit is the third busiest court of appeals in the country. The Sixth Circuit is eleventh in the timeliness of its disposition of cases. Eleventh. Only one Circuit takes longer to issue its opinions.

I believe it is simply not fair to the individual nominees, to the President, or to the people of the Sixth Circuit to allow this obstruction to abide. And if the Committee will not act on these nominees, then the majority of the Senate will as the Constitution intended.

I should note that Chairman Hatch has the authority to ignore the lack of support by the Michigan senators because the so-called blue slip has never been dispositive when it comes to Circuit nominees. Deference always goes to the president on such nominees. Negative blue slips can always be overcome by a record that the home state senators were consulted. That record exists here, in my view. “

From one of the most important small papers in the country. The Manchester Union Leader. This may be the first editorial on judges in that paper and in the State.

Judging judges: Conservatives, Catholics needn't apply

THERE IS an advertisement making the rounds in some states with the headline "Catholics need not apply." It was funded by the Catholic Ave Maria List, and it suggests that U.S. Senate Democrats have set a standard for the federal bench that would forbid Catholics from becoming federal judges. It has struck a chord.

Democratic senators are opposing President Bush's nomination of Alabama Attorney General William Pryor to the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals because of his "deeply held" belief that abortion is wrong.

In opposing Pryor's nomination on the grounds that he believes strongly that abortion is immoral, the Democrats are doing nothing more than playing sleazy partisan politics. The truth is, they will find any reason to oppose any Bush nominee whose appointment they think they can derail. Pryor's stance on abortion happens to be the most expedient excuse to fight his nomination.

But a funny thing happened on the way to the filibuster, which New York Sen. Charles Schumer said this week would occur when Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist calls for a vote of cloture on Pryor's nomination today. Republicans countered that opposing Pryor for his views on abortion means that no one who adheres to Catholic doctrine can become a federal judge.

Democrats have been unable to defend themselves against this charge of anti-Catholic bias. Attempting to defend themselves, they have given further evidence that the charge is true. Sen. Dick Durbin, D-Ill., was quoted in The Hill newspaper yesterday as saying, "Religion is the last refuge of extremists." That fairly well sums up the view of the Senate's leading Democrats.

Senate Republicans, who respect tradition, allowed President Clinton to fill the federal courts with liberal judges. They delayed votes on some nominees, but they never filibustered one. Senate Democrats, who are willing to trample on any tradition if that advances their political agenda, are taking the extraordinary step of filibustering President Bush's judicial nominees only because those nominees are not liberal.

What Senate Democrats are doing to the judicial nominations process is a disgrace to their party and to the country.

The discharge effort is over....it was not expected to be effective. It was used to raise the profile of the nominees and the situation. The next step will be to push for a hearing for the group...letter from Frist to Hatch requesting hearing is expected soon. Thanks.

Questions of Faith Raised in Confirmations

Interest Groups Claim Democratic Senators Veto Catholic Nominees
July 21, 2003

By Brent Kendall
Daily Journal Staff Writer

WASHINGTON - The day after Bill Pryor, a nominee for the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, faced questions from Senate Democrats concerned about his views on abortion and the separation of church and state, Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, appeared on television and explained why he asked Pryor a set of questions that he had never posed to any other nominee.

"I got so upset yesterday that I actually did something I've never done before," Hatch told Chris Matthews on MSNBC's political talk show, "Hardball."

"I asked him what his religion was, knowing that he was Catholic. Just so everybody would know that when they were attacking his beliefs, they were attacking his Catholic beliefs," he said.

During Pryor's June 11 nomination hearing, Hatch asked the Alabama attorney general about his religious affiliation (Roman Catholic), whether he was active in his church (yes) and whether he believed in his religion (yes).

Senators on both sides of the aisle objected to Hatch's approach. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., said a nominee's religion "is irrelevant to our consideration," suggesting "just as we're supposed to be colorblind, we should be religious blind."

Arlen Specter, R-Pa., said, "There are enough questions to inquire into and enough substantive matters that [religion] ought to be out of bounds."

But Hatch said the questioning was necessary. Pryor had been smeared by interest groups, he said, hit below the belt by some of his opponents' criticisms and attacked for his religious faith.

"In all honesty, I think the Democrats forget there are two clauses in the First Amendment pertaining to religion - the Establishment Clause and the Free Exercise Clause," Hatch told Matthews.

"I think they've forgotten the Free Exercise Clause ... and, you know, it's getting so that a pro-life Catholic can't serve in the federal judiciary."

It's a position some conservative advocacy groups and Catholic organizations share. And, galvanized by the Pryor controversy, they are going public with arguments that nominees of strong religious faith cannot pass certain "tests" for approval set forth by Democrats.

The Democrats and liberal advocacy groups vigorously deny the charges and call them an attempt to distract attention from their legitimate concerns about contentious Bush nominees.

In addition to Pryor, two other pro-life Catholics are currently mired in the nomination wars: Arkansas District Court nominee James Leon Holmes and Los Angeles County Superior Court Judge Carolyn Kuhl, a nominee for the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Republicans soon may push forward on all three nominees, and some supporters are preparing to use the opportunity to make religion an issue.

The Committee for Justice, a group founded by C. Boyden Gray, White House counsel in the first Bush administration, is considering plans to run an ad campaign highlighting Democratic opposition to President Bush's nominees, with the possible theme, "Catholics Need Not Apply."

"Kuhl and Pryor both happen to be Catholic, and there is an argument to be made that with some of the attacks that have been made against them, the Democrats are backing themselves into a quasi-religious test where anybody who holds personal views that are orthodox religious views is automatically considered out of the mainstream and unacceptable for the federal bench," said Sean Rushton, the group's executive director.

"I think that's certainly a button we want to push," he said. "The Democrats may deny it, but actions speak louder than words."

Kuhl would not comment, saying, "As a nominee, I've maintained a 'no comment' position throughout, so I'm going to stay with that."

Joe Cella, who heads The Ave Maria List, a Catholic political action committee committed to electing pro-life members of Congress, said his people are working at the grass-roots level to publicize the issue.

Democrats engaged in "hostile questioning" of Pryor, he said.

"Their behavior is a dark example of the new anti-Catholicism, which is sort of the last acceptable prejudice in America."

The charges don't sit well with Catholics on the other side of the political spectrum or with other pro-choice advocates, who say the main issue with Pryor and some other nominees is abortion, not religion.

"What [Democrats] want to do is have nominees that are not going to ditch Roe v. Wade. They don't care whether these people are Catholics or not," said Sister Maureen Fiedler, host of the Washington, D.C.-based public radio series, "Interfaith Voices."

Pryor has called the Roe decision "the worst abomination of the history of constitutional law." Kuhl was involved in an unsuccessful 1985 attempt to have Roe overturned. Holmes, elaborating in 1980 on his abortion views, wrote that rape victims rarely get pregnant. He later apologized.

Opponents also have voiced concerns about how committed Holmes and Pryor are to the separation of church and state. Holmes once said that "Christianity, in principle, cannot accept subordination to the political authorities," and Pryor has said that "the challenge of the next millennium will be to preserve the American experiment by restoring its Christian perspective."

Fiedler said the notion that people of strong faith can't sit on the federal bench is "ridiculous on its face."

"It's not their religious views that are doing this but rather the way in which their political views intertwine," she said.

The charges also don't sit well in the office of Leahy, the ranking member of the Senate Judiciary Committee, who is himself a Catholic. Leahy spokesman David Carle said the senator "has always firmly believed and firmly stated that there never should be a religious test for judicial nominees."

"In talks with small groups on the religious right, not intended for general audiences, Senator Hatch for several months has planted seeds alleging a 'religious test,'" Carle said.

But he called the allegation of such a test a "detestable charge" and a "blatant lie that is plainly refuted by the facts themselves."

Democrats have confirmed 136 nominees, most of whom "presumably share the administration's right-to-life philosophy, and some of these ... presumably are Christians," Carle said.

As to judges' faiths generally, the Federal Judiciary Center keeps statistics on judges' race, ethnicity and gender but not their religion.

"We don't have any complete way of knowing how many Catholics, how many Hindus, how many Protestants, how many agnostics, et cetera, there are," said Dick Carelli, spokesman at the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts.

Leahy's staff was particularly troubled by the July 13 comments of Andrea Lafferty, executive director of the Traditional Family Values Coalition, a pro-life program,

"Washington Journal."

"There's a lot of anti-Christian bigotry coming out of the United States Senate," Lafferty said.

"Senator Leahy has never met a Christian that he likes. He is one of the most anti-Christian members in Congress, and he continues to play that out over and over, particularly with these judicial nominees," Lafferty said.

Leahy was attending Mass at the time the program aired, Carle said.

Frances Kissling, president of Catholics for a Free Choice, said it was "despicable" to suggest that senators' oppositions to certain nominees were related to the nominees' religion, but, she said, such tactics were only marginally effective.

"I think these are fringe campaigns that should not be blown up out of proportion. In the mainstream, nobody pays attention to this. This is go-nowhere stuff," Kissling said.

Nan Aron, president of the liberal advocacy group Alliance for Justice, said the religion issue was "extraneous and irrelevant."

"And it also is an effort of Pryor's supporters and some of the senators to distract attention away from Pryor's dangerous views on so many issues," she said.

Ray Flynn, former mayor of Boston and U.S. ambassador to the Vatican, said he isn't making arguments like those advanced by Lafferty, but he does believe the Catholic issue is a valid one.

Yes, the fight over Pryor and some other judicial nominees is about abortion, but one can't divorce Pryor's views on abortion from his faith, said Flynn, president of the advocacy group Your Catholic Voice.

"The fact is, if you're a faithful Catholic and you follow the principles and the values of the Catholic church, you can't be pro-choice. You have to be pro-life," he said.

Flynn, a lifelong Democrat who described himself as pro-life, pro-family and pro-poor, said he doesn't see his group as part of the religious right. In fact, he said, faithful Catholics were not altogether welcome in either party.

Your Catholic Voice sent an e-mail to 170,000 people calling for Catholics to support Pryor, saying he was a "Catholic faithful citizen with a stellar record of public service and competency in the law."

The response they received was "significant," Flynn said, and called their effort "the type of Catholic political activism that is necessary."

Flynn's national field director, Bill May, said Pryor's religion was far from irrelevant.

"Does a conscience guided by faith disqualify him from service on the Court of Appeals?" he asked.

"That's a legitimate question," he said.

The Judiciary Committee's vote on Pryor, which has been delayed four times, now is scheduled for Wednesday. Kuhl and Holmes have both received committee approval, and their nominations await action before the full Senate.

From one of the most important small papers in the country. The Manchester Union Leader. This may be the first editorial on judges in that paper and in the State.

Judging judges: Conservatives, Catholics needn't apply

THERE IS an advertisement making the rounds in some states with the headline "Catholics need not apply." It was funded by the Catholic Ave Maria List, and it suggests that U.S. Senate Democrats have set a standard for the federal bench that would forbid Catholics from becoming federal judges. It has struck a chord.

Democratic senators are opposing President Bush's nomination of Alabama Attorney General William Pryor to the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals because of his "deeply held" belief that abortion is wrong.

In opposing Pryor's nomination on the grounds that he believes strongly that abortion is immoral, the Democrats are doing nothing more than playing sleazy partisan politics. The truth is, they will find any reason to oppose any Bush nominee whose appointment they think they can derail. Pryor's stance on abortion happens to be the most expedient excuse to fight his nomination.

But a funny thing happened on the way to the filibuster, which New York Sen. Charles Schumer said this week would occur when Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist calls for a vote of cloture on Pryor's nomination today. Republicans countered that opposing Pryor for his views on abortion means that no one who adheres to Catholic doctrine can become a federal judge.

Democrats have been unable to defend themselves against this charge of anti-Catholic bias. Attempting to defend themselves, they have given further evidence that the charge is true. Sen. Dick Durbin, D-Ill., was quoted in The Hill newspaper yesterday as saying, "Religion is the last refuge of extremists." That fairly well sums up the view of the Senate's leading Democrats.

Senate Republicans, who respect tradition, allowed President Clinton to fill the federal courts with liberal judges. They delayed votes on some nominees, but they never filibustered one. Senate Democrats, who are willing to trample on any tradition if that advances their political agenda, are taking the extraordinary step of filibustering President Bush's judicial nominees only because those nominees are not liberal.

What Senate Democrats are doing to the judicial nominations process is a disgrace to their party and to the country.

Opinion Columnist Quin Hillyer

07/16/03

Using pilfered documents, Democrats on the U.S. Senate Judiciary Committee are making a last-minute attempt to derail the nomination of Alabama Attorney General Bill Pryor for a seat on the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Pryor's first problem is that, as an elected official and a participant in the political process, he has helped raise campaign contributions for his political party. How shocking. Next we'll discover that senators, too, raise money.

Pryor's second problem is that he answered a written question too precisely. This was a bad mistake. Faced with an open-ended question, Pryor should have made clear that his answer was not definitive. This he failed to do.

What this all involves is Pryor's role in helping found a group called the Republican Attorneys General Association (RAGA). U.S. Sen. Russ Feingold, D-Wis., the famed campaign finance reformer, asked Pryor at his June 11 committee hearing if a certain scenario, involving a donation to RAGA from a corporation that might one day be investigated by a state attorney general, would present at least the appearance of conflict of interest given your role in RAGA?

Feingold's question was purely hypothetical. Pryor answered that in no instance has he solicited funds from a company under investigation or otherwise failed in ensuring that the law is enforced against any potential contributor.

In a written follow-up, Feingold asked: Are you aware of any companies in the State of Alabama that are or were members of RAGA? Were you involved in the solicitation of any of these companies? If so, which companies?

To be a member of RAGA, as Pryor earlier had explained, required a contribution of at least $5,000. Pryor also had previously explained that at the request of RAGA's staff, he did make some fundraising calls, but that the Republican National Committee kept all records of who donated when -- and that the RNC co-mingled RAGA funds with money for Republican governors and other state officials.

Pryor's answer to Feingold's question about Alabama companies was as follows: I am unaware of any Alabama companies being members of RAGA.

Fast-forward to yesterday. That's when committee staff contacted two former RAGA staffers, Ben Dupuy in Washington, D.C., and Claire Austin in Montgomery. They played phone tag with Austin, but were able to interview Dupuy. He said they asked if Pryor made fundraising calls to companies in Alabama. He said he told them Austin would know, because she was the one who handled fundraising.

Dupuy also said the process was mostly staff-driven. Documents show that RAGA staff had to plead with Republican attorneys general to secure a random hour on their schedules to make such calls. It's not as if every AG kept a record, of who the RAGA members were, in their wallets, Dupuy told me.

What was the point of all this? Apparently, to find some way to read certain documents as if to show that Pryor should have been aware that Alabama companies are RAGA members.

Would Bill Pryor know specifically who were members of RAGA? Claire Austin repeated a question of mine, rhetorically. I kinda doubt it. As a staff person, of course I remember all that stuff. ... That's what I did for a living.

Nevertheless, the committee has documents showing that Bill Pryor did ask some Alabama companies to contribute to RAGA. And some companies with Alabama subsidiaries, such as the Southern Company out of Atlanta (parent to Alabama Power), did become RAGA members.

Austin said the only Southern Company people she remembers attending RAGA events were out of their Washington office.

As for conflicts of interest, Austin said that Bill would not make any calls to the Microsoft people because there was pending litigation nationwide. Pryor was that way about tobacco companies, too. In short, Pryor avoided any potential ethical conflicts that he saw.

Still, a friendly critic could say that Pryor's answer to Feingold wasn't good enough. Yes, he was unaware that any Alabama-based companies were members. (It's still not clear whether any were.) But he perhaps should have said that certainly Alabama companies -- ones not under any investigation -- were asked to join, and that some may well have contributed at or below the membership level. Not, as Jerry Seinfeld would say, that there's anything wrong with that.

By this time, the committee Democrats were searching for a potential reason to assume that Pryor might have known that somewhere along the line there may have been an appearance of a conflict of interest. Obviously, that's about four removes from anything that should rightly disqualify a judicial nominee.

But what led them to this trail of questions is more interesting. Those documents they had -- documents that gave them more information about RAGA than Pryor himself has access to -- came from a former secretary of Claire Austin's by the name of Kelly Foradori. Foradori stopped working for Austin at the end of 1999, after helping with RAGA's first-ever major fundraiser (on Kiawah Island, S.C.).

Austin says she remembers confronting Foradori then to ask if Foradori retained any documents. Turns out, her suspicions were right. Foradori e-mailed those documents to the committee. Most were memos from Austin to various donors. Only a few mention Pryor. But they do show names and affiliations of people who were scheduled to attend some RAGA events.

Foradori's motive in all this is unclear. When reached by cell phone yesterday, before I could even identify myself, she told me: I don't have any comment for you, and please do not call my cell phone again.

What is known is that Foradori was a longtime employee of lobbyist Lanny Young -- and a highly paid one at that, said Austin. Austin briefly had a business with Young, and she said Foradori came with Young (already making what for a clerical employee was a hefty salary) when Austin and Young joined forces.

Lanny Young last month pleaded guilty to bribing Nick Bailey, a top aide to former Alabama Gov. Don Siegelman. Bill Pryor's office is working in conjunction with federal Justice Department officials in the ongoing investigation involving Young, Bailey and others in the Siegelman orbit.

Now Foradori, at least at one time a close associate and employee of Young's, has sent Austin's RAGA documents -- retained against Austin's wishes more than three years ago -- to committee staffers representing U.S. Sen. Ted Kennedy, D-Mass., a leading Pryor opponent.

I think I smell a dirty political payback for an attorney general doing his job, which is prosecuting people for crimes.

But having looked at those documents myself, I see no smoking gun -- nor, for that matter, any gunpowder or bullets or even anything approaching a crime or ethical transgression, that would rightly block Pryor's nomination. Because when it comes to following the law, Bill Pryor is always precise.

Sometimes to his own political detriment.

Mr. FRIST. I now send a resolution to the desk to discharge from the Judiciary Committee the nomination of David W. McKeague, of Michigan, to be a United States Circuit Judge for the Sixth Circuit. I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, this nomination for the Sixth Circuit, and the others that will be made by the majority leader, have not had the benefit of any hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee. I believe that hearing should take place before a lifetime appointment is given to any person to the Circuit Court. So, on behalf of Senators CARL LEVIN and DEBBIE STABENOW of Michigan, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I now send a resolution to discharge from the Judiciary Committee the nomination of Susan Bieke Nielson of Michigan to be a U.S. circuit judge for the Sixth Circuit, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, for the same reasons, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. FRIST. I now send a resolution to discharge from the Judiciary Committee the nomination of Henry W. Saad of Michigan to be a U.S. circuit judge for the Sixth Circuit, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, for the same reasons, I object.

From one of the most important small papers in the country. The Manchester Union Leader. This may be the first editorial on judges in that paper and in the State.

Judging judges: Conservatives, Catholics needn't apply

THERE IS an advertisement making the rounds in some states with the headline "Catholics need not apply." It was funded by the Catholic Ave Maria List, and it suggests that U.S. Senate Democrats have set a standard for the federal bench that would forbid Catholics from becoming federal judges. It has struck a chord.

Democratic senators are opposing President Bush's nomination of Alabama Attorney General William Pryor to the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals because of his "deeply held" belief that abortion is wrong.

In opposing Pryor's nomination on the grounds that he believes strongly that abortion is immoral, the Democrats are doing nothing more than playing sleazy partisan politics. The truth is, they will find any reason to oppose any Bush nominee whose appointment they think they can derail. Pryor's stance on abortion happens to be the most expedient excuse to fight his nomination.

But a funny thing happened on the way to the filibuster, which New York Sen. Charles Schumer said this week would occur when Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist calls for a vote of cloture on Pryor's nomination today. Republicans countered that opposing Pryor for his views on abortion means that no one who adheres to Catholic doctrine can become a federal judge.

Democrats have been unable to defend themselves against this charge of anti-Catholic bias. Attempting to defend themselves, they have given further evidence that the charge is true. Sen. Dick Durbin, D-Ill., was quoted in The Hill newspaper yesterday as saying, "Religion is the last refuge of extremists." That fairly well sums up the view of the Senate's leading Democrats.

Senate Republicans, who respect tradition, allowed President Clinton to fill the federal courts with liberal judges. They delayed votes on some nominees, but they never filibustered one. Senate Democrats, who are willing to trample on any tradition if that advances their political agenda, are taking the extraordinary step of filibustering President Bush's judicial nominees only because those nominees are not liberal.

What Senate Democrats are doing to the judicial nominations process is a disgrace to their party and to the country.

Questions of Faith Raised in Confirmations

Interest Groups Claim Democratic Senators Veto Catholic Nominees
July 21, 2003

By Brent Kendall
Daily Journal Staff Writer

WASHINGTON - The day after Bill Pryor, a nominee for the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, faced questions from Senate Democrats concerned about his views on abortion and the separation of church and state, Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, appeared on television and explained why he asked Pryor a set of questions that he had never posed to any other nominee.

"I got so upset yesterday that I actually did something I've never done before," Hatch told Chris Matthews on MSNBC's political talk show, "Hardball."

"I asked him what his religion was, knowing that he was Catholic. Just so everybody would know that when they were attacking his beliefs, they were attacking his Catholic beliefs," he said.

During Pryor's June 11 nomination hearing, Hatch asked the Alabama attorney general about his religious affiliation (Roman Catholic), whether he was active in his church (yes) and whether he believed in his religion (yes).

Senators on both sides of the aisle objected to Hatch's approach. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., said a nominee's religion "is irrelevant to our consideration," suggesting "just as we're supposed to be colorblind, we should be religious blind."

Arlen Specter, R-Pa., said, "There are enough questions to inquire into and enough substantive matters that [religion] ought to be out of bounds."

But Hatch said the questioning was necessary. Pryor had been smeared by interest groups, he said, hit below the belt by some of his opponents' criticisms and attacked for his religious faith.

"In all honesty, I think the Democrats forget there are two clauses in the First Amendment pertaining to religion - the Establishment Clause and the Free Exercise Clause," Hatch told Matthews.

"I think they've forgotten the Free Exercise Clause ... and, you know, it's getting so that a pro-life Catholic can't serve in the federal judiciary."

It's a position some conservative advocacy groups and Catholic organizations share. And, galvanized by the Pryor controversy, they are going public with arguments that nominees of strong religious faith cannot pass certain "tests" for approval set forth by Democrats.

The Democrats and liberal advocacy groups vigorously deny the charges and call them an attempt to distract attention from their legitimate concerns about contentious Bush nominees.

In addition to Pryor, two other pro-life Catholics are currently mired in the nomination wars: Arkansas District Court nominee James Leon Holmes and Los Angeles County Superior Court Judge Carolyn Kuhl, a nominee for the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Republicans soon may push forward on all three nominees, and some supporters are preparing to use the opportunity to make religion an issue.

The Committee for Justice, a group founded by C. Boyden Gray, White House counsel in the first Bush administration, is considering plans to run an ad campaign highlighting Democratic opposition to President Bush's nominees, with the possible theme, "Catholics Need Not Apply."

"Kuhl and Pryor both happen to be Catholic, and there is an argument to be made that with some of the attacks that have been made against them, the Democrats are backing themselves into a quasi-religious test where anybody who holds personal views that are orthodox religious views is automatically considered out of the mainstream and unacceptable for the federal bench," said Sean Rushton, the group's executive director.

"I think that's certainly a button we want to push," he said. "The Democrats may deny it, but actions speak louder than words."

Kuhl would not comment, saying, "As a nominee, I've maintained a 'no comment' position throughout, so I'm going to stay with that."

Joe Cella, who heads The Ave Maria List, a Catholic political action committee committed to electing pro-life members of Congress, said his people are working at the grass-roots level to publicize the issue.

Democrats engaged in "hostile questioning" of Pryor, he said.

"Their behavior is a dark example of the new anti-Catholicism, which is sort of the last acceptable prejudice in America."

The charges don't sit well with Catholics on the other side of the political spectrum or with other pro-choice advocates, who say the main issue with Pryor and some other nominees is abortion, not religion.

"What [Democrats] want to do is have nominees that are not going to ditch Roe v. Wade. They don't care whether these people are Catholics or not," said Sister Maureen Fiedler, host of the Washington, D.C.-based public radio series, "Interfaith Voices."

Pryor has called the Roe decision "the worst abomination of the history of constitutional law." Kuhl was involved in an unsuccessful 1985 attempt to have Roe overturned. Holmes, elaborating in 1980 on his abortion views, wrote that rape victims rarely get pregnant. He later apologized.

Opponents also have voiced concerns about how committed Holmes and Pryor are to the separation of church and state. Holmes once said that "Christianity, in principle, cannot accept subordination to the political authorities," and Pryor has said that "the challenge of the next millennium will be to preserve the American experiment by restoring its Christian perspective."

Fiedler said the notion that people of strong faith can't sit on the federal bench is "ridiculous on its face."

"It's not their religious views that are doing this but rather the way in which their political views intertwine," she said.

The charges also don't sit well in the office of Leahy, the ranking member of the Senate Judiciary Committee, who is himself a Catholic. Leahy spokesman David Carle said the senator "has always firmly believed and firmly stated that there never should be a religious test for judicial nominees."

"In talks with small groups on the religious right, not intended for general audiences, Senator Hatch for several months has planted seeds alleging a 'religious test,'" Carle said.

But he called the allegation of such a test a "detestable charge" and a "blatant lie that is plainly refuted by the facts themselves."

Democrats have confirmed 136 nominees, most of whom "presumably share the administration's right-to-life philosophy, and some of these ... presumably are Christians," Carle said.

As to judges' faiths generally, the Federal Judiciary Center keeps statistics on judges' race, ethnicity and gender but not their religion.

"We don't have any complete way of knowing how many Catholics, how many Hindus, how many Protestants, how many agnostics, et cetera, there are," said Dick Carelli, spokesman at the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts.

Leahy's staff was particularly troubled by the July 13 comments of Andrea Lafferty, executive director of the Traditional Family Values Coalition, a pro-life program,

EXP-18-2143-F-001456

"Washington Journal."

"There's a lot of anti-Christian bigotry coming out of the United States Senate," Lafferty said.

"Senator Leahy has never met a Christian that he likes. He is one of the most anti-Christian members in Congress, and he continues to play that out over and over, particularly with these judicial nominees," Lafferty said.

Leahy was attending Mass at the time the program aired, Carle said.

Frances Kissling, president of Catholics for a Free Choice, said it was "despicable" to suggest that senators' oppositions to certain nominees were related to the nominees' religion, but, she said, such tactics were only marginally effective.

"I think these are fringe campaigns that should not be blown up out of proportion. In the mainstream, nobody pays attention to this. This is go-nowhere stuff," Kissling said.

Nan Aron, president of the liberal advocacy group Alliance for Justice, said the religion issue was "extraneous and irrelevant."

"And it also is an effort of Pryor's supporters and some of the senators to distract attention away from Pryor's dangerous views on so many issues," she said.

Ray Flynn, former mayor of Boston and U.S. ambassador to the Vatican, said he isn't making arguments like those advanced by Lafferty, but he does believe the Catholic issue is a valid one.

Yes, the fight over Pryor and some other judicial nominees is about abortion, but one can't divorce Pryor's views on abortion from his faith, said Flynn, president of the advocacy group Your Catholic Voice.

"The fact is, if you're a faithful Catholic and you follow the principles and the values of the Catholic church, you can't be pro-choice. You have to be pro-life," he said.

Flynn, a lifelong Democrat who described himself as pro-life, pro-family and pro-poor, said he doesn't see his group as part of the religious right. In fact, he said, faithful Catholics were not altogether welcome in either party.

Your Catholic Voice sent an e-mail to 170,000 people calling for Catholics to support Pryor, saying he was a "Catholic faithful citizen with a stellar record of public service and competency in the law."

The response they received was "significant," Flynn said, and called their effort "the type of Catholic political activism that is necessary."

Flynn's national field director, Bill May, said Pryor's religion was far from irrelevant.

"Does a conscience guided by faith disqualify him from service on the Court of Appeals?" he asked.

"That's a legitimate question," he said.

The Judiciary Committee's vote on Pryor, which has been delayed four times, now is scheduled for Wednesday. Kuhl and Holmes have both received committee approval, and their nominations await action before the full Senate.

Statement of Dr. Frist on Freeing the Michigan 4 , July 9, 2003

“On Monday I took the rare but not unprecedented step to discharge the Judiciary Committee of the four nominations pending to fill the Michigan seats to the 6th Circuit Court of Appeals that serves the people I represent in Tennessee.

I took that step because the people of the 6th Circuit called upon us to act. I received a remarkable letter from 6th Circuit scholars outlining just how the delay of these nominees is hurting the people of Michigan, Ohio, Kentucky, and Tennessee. Last week, the legislature of Michigan introduced a concurrent resolution asking the Senate to act.

I took that step because the Committee has sought to satisfy the two Michigan senators under its traditional practices, but this has gone on for over one year for all four nominees. All 4 of the vacancies in question have been deemed judicial emergencies by the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts.

The vacancy rate in the Sixth Circuit is 25% even while the Sixth Circuit is the third busiest court of appeals in the country. The Sixth Circuit is eleventh in the timeliness of its disposition of cases. Eleventh. Only one Circuit takes longer to issue its opinions.

I believe it is simply not fair to the individual nominees, to the President, or to the people of the Sixth Circuit to allow this obstruction to abide. And if the Committee will not act on these nominees, then the majority of the Senate will as the Constitution intended.

I should note that Chairman Hatch has the authority to ignore the lack of support by the Michigan senators because the so-called blue slip has never been dispositive when it comes to Circuit nominees. Deference always goes to the president on such nominees. Negative blue slips can always be overcome by a record that the home state senators were consulted. That record exists here, in my view. “

I took that step because the Committee has sought to satisfy the two Michigan senators under its traditional practices, but this has gone on for over one year for all four nominees. All 4 of the vacancies in question have been deemed judicial emergencies by the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts.

The vacancy rate in the Sixth Circuit is 25% even while the Sixth Circuit is the third busiest court of appeals in the country. The Sixth Circuit is eleventh in the timeliness of its disposition of cases. Eleventh. Only one Circuit takes longer to issue its opinions.

I believe it is simply not fair to the individual nominees, to the President, or to the people of the Sixth Circuit to allow this obstruction to abide. And if the Committee will not act on these nominees, then the majority of the Senate will as the Constitution intended.

I should note that Chairman Hatch has the authority to ignore the lack of support by the Michigan senators because the so-called blue slip has never been dispositive when it comes to Circuit nominees. Deference always goes to the president on such nominees. Negative blue slips can always be overcome by a record that the home state senators were consulted. That record exists here, in my view. “

From one of the most important small papers in the country. The Manchester Union Leader. This may be the first editorial on judges in that paper and in the State.

Judging judges: Conservatives, Catholics needn't apply

THERE IS an advertisement making the rounds in some states with the headline "Catholics need not apply." It was funded by the Catholic Ave Maria List, and it suggests that U.S. Senate Democrats have set a standard for the federal bench that would forbid Catholics from becoming federal judges. It has struck a chord.

Democratic senators are opposing President Bush's nomination of Alabama Attorney General William Pryor to the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals because of his "deeply held" belief that abortion is wrong.

In opposing Pryor's nomination on the grounds that he believes strongly that abortion is immoral, the Democrats are doing nothing more than playing sleazy partisan politics. The truth is, they will find any reason to oppose any Bush nominee whose appointment they think they can derail. Pryor's stance on abortion happens to be the most expedient excuse to fight his nomination.

But a funny thing happened on the way to the filibuster, which New York Sen. Charles Schumer said this week would occur when Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist calls for a vote of cloture on Pryor's nomination today. Republicans countered that opposing Pryor for his views on abortion means that no one who adheres to Catholic doctrine can become a federal judge.

Democrats have been unable to defend themselves against this charge of anti-Catholic bias. Attempting to defend themselves, they have given further evidence that the charge is true. Sen. Dick Durbin, D-Ill., was quoted in The Hill newspaper yesterday as saying, "Religion is the last refuge of extremists." That fairly well sums up the view of the Senate's leading Democrats.

Senate Republicans, who respect tradition, allowed President Clinton to fill the federal courts with liberal judges. They delayed votes on some nominees, but they never filibustered one. Senate Democrats, who are willing to trample on any tradition if that advances their political agenda, are taking the extraordinary step of filibustering President Bush's judicial nominees only because those nominees are not liberal.

What Senate Democrats are doing to the judicial nominations process is a disgrace to their party and to the country.

Questions of Faith Raised in Confirmations

Interest Groups Claim Democratic Senators Veto Catholic Nominees
July 21, 2003

By Brent Kendall
Daily Journal Staff Writer

WASHINGTON - The day after Bill Pryor, a nominee for the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, faced questions from Senate Democrats concerned about his views on abortion and the separation of church and state, Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, appeared on television and explained why he asked Pryor a set of questions that he had never posed to any other nominee.

"I got so upset yesterday that I actually did something I've never done before," Hatch told Chris Matthews on MSNBC's political talk show, "Hardball."

"I asked him what his religion was, knowing that he was Catholic. Just so everybody would know that when they were attacking his beliefs, they were attacking his Catholic beliefs," he said.

During Pryor's June 11 nomination hearing, Hatch asked the Alabama attorney general about his religious affiliation (Roman Catholic), whether he was active in his church (yes) and whether he believed in his religion (yes).

Senators on both sides of the aisle objected to Hatch's approach. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., said a nominee's religion "is irrelevant to our consideration," suggesting "just as we're supposed to be colorblind, we should be religious blind."

Arlen Specter, R-Pa., said, "There are enough questions to inquire into and enough substantive matters that [religion] ought to be out of bounds." But Hatch said the questioning was necessary. Pryor had been smeared by interest groups, he said, hit below the belt by some of his opponents' criticisms and attacked for his religious faith.

"In all honesty, I think the Democrats forget there are two clauses in the First Amendment pertaining to religion - the Establishment Clause and the Free Exercise Clause," Hatch told Matthews.

"I think they've forgotten the Free Exercise Clause ... and, you know, it's getting so that a pro-life Catholic can't serve in the federal judiciary." It's a position some conservative advocacy groups and Catholic organizations share. And, galvanized by the Pryor controversy, they are going public with arguments that nominees of strong religious faith cannot pass certain "tests" for approval set forth by Democrats. The Democrats and liberal advocacy groups vigorously deny the charges and call them an attempt to distract attention from their legitimate concerns about contentious Bush nominees.

In addition to Pryor, two other pro-life Catholics are currently mired in the nomination wars: Arkansas District Court nominee James Leon Holmes and Los Angeles County Superior Court Judge Carolyn Kuhl, a nominee for the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Republicans soon may push forward on all three nominees, and some supporters are preparing to use the opportunity to make religion an issue. The Committee for Justice, a group founded by C. Boyden Gray, White House counsel in the first Bush administration, is considering plans to run an ad campaign highlighting Democratic opposition to President Bush's nominees, with the possible theme, "Catholics Need Not Apply."

"Kuhl and Pryor both happen to be Catholic, and there is an argument to be made that with some of the attacks that have been made against them, the Democrats are backing themselves into a quasi-religious test where anybody who holds personal views that are orthodox religious views is automatically considered out of the mainstream and unacceptable for the federal bench," said Sean Rushton, the group's executive director.

"I think that's certainly a button we want to push," he said. "The Democrats may deny it, but actions speak louder than words." Kuhl would not comment, saying, "As a nominee, I've maintained a 'no comment' position throughout, so I'm going to stay with that."

Joe Cella, who heads The Ave Maria List, a Catholic political action committee committed to electing pro-life members of Congress, said his people are working at the grass-roots level to publicize the issue.

Democrats engaged in "hostile questioning" of Pryor, he said.

"Their behavior is a dark example of the new anti-Catholicism, which is sort of the last acceptable prejudice in America."

The charges don't sit well with Catholics on the other side of the political spectrum or with other pro-choice advocates, who say the main issue with Pryor and some other nominees is abortion, not religion.

"What [Democrats] want to do is have nominees that are not going to ditch Roe v. Wade. They don't care whether these people are Catholics or not," said Sister Maureen Fiedler, host of the Washington, D.C.-based public radio series, "Interfaith Voices."

Pryor has called the Roe decision "the worst abomination of the history of constitutional law." Kuhl was involved in an unsuccessful 1985 attempt to have Roe overturned. Holmes, elaborating in 1980 on his abortion views, wrote that rape victims rarely get pregnant. He later apologized. Opponents also have voiced concerns about how committed Holmes and Pryor are to the separation of church and state. Holmes once said that "Christianity, in principle, cannot accept subordination to the political authorities," and Pryor has said that "the challenge of the next millennium will be to preserve the American experiment by restoring its Christian perspective."

Fiedler said the notion that people of strong faith can't sit on the federal bench is "ridiculous on its face."

"It's not their religious views that are doing this but rather the way in which their political views intertwine," she said.

The charges also don't sit well in the office of Leahy, the ranking member of the Senate Judiciary Committee, who is himself a Catholic. Leahy spokesman David Carle said the senator "has always firmly believed and firmly stated that there never should be a religious test for judicial nominees."

"In talks with small groups on the religious right, not intended for general audiences, Senator Hatch for several months has planted seeds alleging a 'religious test,'" Carle said.

But he called the allegation of such a test a "detestable charge" and a "blatant lie that is plainly refuted by the facts themselves." Democrats have confirmed 136 nominees, most of whom "presumably share the administration's right-to-life philosophy, and some of these ... presumably are Christians," Carle said.

As to judges' faiths generally, the Federal Judiciary Center keeps statistics on judges' race, ethnicity and gender but not their religion.

"We don't have any complete way of knowing how many Catholics, how many Hindus, how many Protestants, how many agnostics, et cetera, there are," said Dick Carelli, spokesman at the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts.

Leahy's staff was particularly troubled by the July 13 comments of Andrea Lafferty, executive director of the Traditional Family Values Coalition, a pro-life program,

EXP-18-2143-F-001468

"Washington Journal."

"There's a lot of anti-Christian bigotry coming out of the United States Senate," Lafferty said.

"Senator Leahy has never met a Christian that he likes. He is one of the most anti-Christian members in Congress, and he continues to play that out over and over, particularly with these judicial nominees," Lafferty said.

Leahy was attending Mass at the time the program aired, Carle said.

Frances Kissling, president of Catholics for a Free Choice, said it was "despicable" to suggest that senators' oppositions to certain nominees were related to the nominees' religion, but, she said, such tactics were only marginally effective.

"I think these are fringe campaigns that should not be blown up out of proportion. In the mainstream, nobody pays attention to this. This is go-nowhere stuff," Kissling said.

Nan Aron, president of the liberal advocacy group Alliance for Justice, said the religion issue was "extraneous and irrelevant."

"And it also is an effort of Pryor's supporters and some of the senators to distract attention away from Pryor's dangerous views on so many issues," she said.

Ray Flynn, former mayor of Boston and U.S. ambassador to the Vatican, said he isn't making arguments like those advanced by Lafferty, but he does believe the Catholic issue is a valid one.

Yes, the fight over Pryor and some other judicial nominees is about abortion, but one can't divorce Pryor's views on abortion from his faith, said Flynn, president of the advocacy group Your Catholic Voice.

"The fact is, if you're a faithful Catholic and you follow the principles and the values of the Catholic church, you can't be pro-choice. You have to be pro-life," he said.

Flynn, a lifelong Democrat who described himself as pro-life, pro-family and pro-poor, said he doesn't see his group as part of the religious right. In fact, he said, faithful Catholics were not altogether welcome in either party.

Your Catholic Voice sent an e-mail to 170,000 people calling for Catholics to support Pryor, saying he was a "Catholic faithful citizen with a stellar record of public service and competency in the law."

The response they received was "significant," Flynn said, and called their effort "the type of Catholic political activism that is necessary."

Flynn's national field director, Bill May, said Pryor's religion was far from irrelevant.

"Does a conscience guided by faith disqualify him from service on the Court of Appeals?" he asked.

"That's a legitimate question," he said.

The Judiciary Committee's vote on Pryor, which has been delayed four times, now is scheduled for Wednesday. Kuhl and Holmes have both received committee approval, and their nominations await action before the full Senate.

Opinion Columnist Quin Hillyer

A late attack on Pryor, courtesy of purloined memos

07/16/03

Using pilfered documents, Democrats on the U.S. Senate Judiciary Committee are making a last-minute attempt to derail the nomination of Alabama Attorney General Bill Pryor for a seat on the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Pryor's first problem is that, as an elected official and a participant in the political process, he has helped raise campaign contributions for his political party. How shocking. Next we'll discover that senators, too, raise money.

Pryor's second problem is that he answered a written question too precisely. This was a bad mistake. Faced with an open-ended question, Pryor should have made clear that his answer was not definitive. This he failed to do.

What this all involves is Pryor's role in helping found a group called the Republican Attorneys General Association (RAGA). U.S. Sen. Russ Feingold, D-Wis., the famed campaign finance reformer, asked Pryor at his June 11 committee hearing if a certain scenario, involving a donation to RAGA from a corporation that might one day be investigated by a state attorney general, would present at least the appearance of conflict of interest given your role in RAGA?

Feingold's question was purely hypothetical. Pryor answered that in no instance has he solicited funds from a company under investigation or otherwise failed in ensuring that the law is enforced against any potential contributor.

In a written follow-up, Feingold asked: Are you aware of any companies in the State of Alabama that are or were members of RAGA? Were you involved in the solicitation of any of these companies? If so, which companies?

To be a member of RAGA, as Pryor earlier had explained, required a contribution of at least $5,000. Pryor also had previously explained that at the request of RAGA's staff, he did make some fundraising calls, but that the Republican National Committee kept all records of who donated when -- and that the RNC co-mingled RAGA funds with money for Republican governors and other state officials.

Pryor's answer to Feingold's question about Alabama companies was as follows: I am unaware of any Alabama companies being members of RAGA.

Fast-forward to yesterday. That's when committee staff contacted two former RAGA staffers, Ben Dupuy in Washington, D.C., and Claire Austin in Montgomery. They played phone tag with Austin, but were able to interview Dupuy. He said they asked if Pryor made fundraising calls to companies in Alabama. He said he told them Austin would know, because she was the one who handled fundraising.

Dupuy also said the process was mostly staff-driven. Documents show that RAGA staff had to plead with Republican attorneys general to secure a random hour on their schedules to make such calls. It's not as if every AG kept a record, of who the RAGA members were, in their wallets, Dupuy told me.

What was the point of all this? Apparently, to find some way to read certain documents as if to show that Pryor should have been aware that Alabama companies are RAGA members.

Would Bill Pryor know specifically who were members of RAGA? Claire Austin repeated a question of mine, rhetorically. I kinda doubt it. As a staff person, of course I remember all that stuff. ... That's what I did for a living.

Nevertheless, the committee has documents showing that Bill Pryor did ask some Alabama companies to contribute to RAGA. And some companies with Alabama subsidiaries, such as the Southern Company out of Atlanta (parent to Alabama Power), did become RAGA members.

Austin said the only Southern Company people she remembers attending RAGA events were out of their Washington office.

As for conflicts of interest, Austin said that Bill would not make any calls to the Microsoft people because there was pending litigation nationwide. Pryor was that way about tobacco companies, too. In short, Pryor avoided any potential ethical conflicts that he saw.

Still, a friendly critic could say that Pryor's answer to Feingold wasn't good enough. Yes, he was unaware that any Alabama-based companies were members. (It's still not clear whether any were.) But he perhaps should have said that certainly Alabama companies -- ones not under any investigation -- were asked to join, and that some may well have contributed at or below the membership level. Not, as Jerry Seinfeld would say, that there's anything wrong with that.

By this time, the committee Democrats were searching for a potential reason to assume that Pryor might have known that somewhere along the line there may have been an appearance of a conflict of interest. Obviously, that's about four removes from anything that should rightly disqualify a judicial nominee.

But what led them to this trail of questions is more interesting. Those documents they had -- documents that gave them more information about RAGA than Pryor himself has access to -- came from a former secretary of Claire Austin's by the name of Kelly Foradori. Foradori stopped working for Austin at the end of 1999, after helping with RAGA's first-ever major fundraiser (on Kiawah Island, S.C.).

Austin says she remembers confronting Foradori then to ask if Foradori retained any documents. Turns out, her suspicions were right. Foradori e-mailed those documents to the committee. Most were memos from Austin to various donors. Only a few mention Pryor. But they do show names and affiliations of people who were scheduled to attend some RAGA events.

Foradori's motive in all this is unclear. When reached by cell phone yesterday, before I could even identify myself, she told me: I don't have any comment for you, and please do not call my cell phone again.

What is known is that Foradori was a longtime employee of lobbyist Lanny Young -- and a highly paid one at that, said Austin. Austin briefly had a business with Young, and she said Foradori came with Young (already making what for a clerical employee was a hefty salary) when Austin and Young joined forces.

Lanny Young last month pleaded guilty to bribing Nick Bailey, a top aide to former Alabama Gov. Don Siegelman. Bill Pryor's office is working in conjunction with federal Justice Department officials in the ongoing investigation involving Young, Bailey and others in the Siegelman orbit.

Now Foradori, at least at one time a close associate and employee of Young's, has sent Austin's RAGA documents -- retained against Austin's wishes more than three years ago -- to committee staffers representing U.S. Sen. Ted Kennedy, D-Mass., a leading Pryor opponent.

I think I smell a dirty political payback for an attorney general doing his job, which is prosecuting people for crimes.

But having looked at those documents myself, I see no smoking gun -- nor, for that matter, any gunpowder or bullets or even anything approaching a crime or ethical transgression, that would rightly block Pryor's nomination. Because when it comes to following the law, Bill Pryor is always precise.

Sometimes to his own political detriment.

Statement of Dr. Frist on Freeing the Michigan 4 , July 9, 2003

“On Monday I took the rare but not unprecedented step to discharge the Judiciary Committee of the four nominations pending to fill the Michigan seats to the 6th Circuit Court of Appeals that serves the people I represent in Tennessee.

I took that step because the people of the 6th Circuit called upon us to act. I received a remarkable letter from 6th Circuit scholars outlining just how the delay of these nominees is hurting the people of Michigan, Ohio, Kentucky, and Tennessee. Last week, the legislature of Michigan introduced a concurrent resolution asking the Senate to act.

I took that step because the Committee has sought to satisfy the two Michigan senators under its traditional practices, but this has gone on for over one year for all four nominees. All 4 of the vacancies in question have been deemed judicial emergencies by the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts.

The vacancy rate in the Sixth Circuit is 25% even while the Sixth Circuit is the third busiest court of appeals in the country. The Sixth Circuit is eleventh in the timeliness of its disposition of cases. Eleventh. Only one Circuit takes longer to issue its opinions.

I believe it is simply not fair to the individual nominees, to the President, or to the people of the Sixth Circuit to allow this obstruction to abide. And if the Committee will not act on these nominees, then the majority of the Senate will as the Constitution intended.

"I got so upset yesterday that I actually did something I've never done before," Hatch told Chris Matthews on MSNBC's political talk show, "Hardball."

"I asked him what his religion was, knowing that he was Catholic. Just so everybody would know that when they were attacking his beliefs, they were attacking his Catholic beliefs," he said.

During Pryor's June 11 nomination hearing, Hatch asked the Alabama attorney general about his religious affiliation (Roman Catholic), whether he was active in his church (yes) and whether he believed in his religion (yes).

Senators on both sides of the aisle objected to Hatch's approach. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., said a nominee's religion "is irrelevant to our consideration," suggesting "just as we're supposed to be colorblind, we should be religious blind."

Arlen Specter, R-Pa., said, "There are enough questions to inquire into and enough substantive matters that [religion] ought to be out of bounds." But Hatch said the questioning was necessary. Pryor had been smeared by interest groups, he said, hit below the belt by some of his opponents' criticisms and attacked for his religious faith.

"In all honesty, I think the Democrats forget there are two clauses in the First Amendment pertaining to religion - the Establishment Clause and the Free Exercise Clause," Hatch told Matthews.

"I think they've forgotten the Free Exercise Clause ... and, you know, it's getting so that a pro-life Catholic can't serve in the federal judiciary." It's a position some conservative advocacy groups and Catholic organizations share. And, galvanized by the Pryor controversy, they are going public with arguments that nominees of strong religious faith cannot pass certain "tests" for approval set forth by Democrats. The Democrats and liberal advocacy groups vigorously deny the charges and call them an attempt to distract attention from their legitimate concerns about contentious Bush nominees.

In addition to Pryor, two other pro-life Catholics are currently mired in the nomination wars: Arkansas District Court nominee James Leon Holmes and Los Angeles County Superior Court Judge Carolyn Kuhl, a nominee for the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Republicans soon may push forward on all three nominees, and some supporters are preparing to use the opportunity to make religion an issue. The Committee for Justice, a group founded by C. Boyden Gray, White House counsel in the first Bush administration, is considering plans to run an ad campaign highlighting Democratic opposition to President Bush's nominees, with the possible theme, "Catholics Need Not Apply."

"Kuhl and Pryor both happen to be Catholic, and there is an argument to be made that with some of the attacks that have been made against them, the Democrats are backing themselves into a quasi-religious test where anybody who holds personal views that are orthodox religious views is automatically considered out of the mainstream and unacceptable for the federal bench," said Sean Rushton, the group's executive director.

"I think that's certainly a button we want to push," he said. "The Democrats may deny it, but actions speak louder than words." Kuhl would not comment, saying, "As a nominee, I've maintained a 'no comment' position throughout, so I'm going to stay with that."

Joe Cella, who heads The Ave Maria List, a Catholic political action committee committed to electing pro-life members of Congress, said his people are working at the grass-roots level to publicize the issue.

Democrats engaged in "hostile questioning" of Pryor, he said.

"Their behavior is a dark example of the new anti-Catholicism, which is sort of the last acceptable prejudice in America."

The charges don't sit well with Catholics on the other side of the political spectrum or with other pro-choice advocates, who say the main issue with Pryor and some other nominees is abortion, not religion.

"What [Democrats] want to do is have nominees that are not going to ditch Roe v. Wade. They don't care whether these people are Catholics or not," said Sister Maureen Fiedler, host of the Washington, D.C.-based public radio series, "Interfaith Voices."

Pryor has called the Roe decision "the worst abomination of the history of constitutional law." Kuhl was involved in an unsuccessful 1985 attempt to have Roe overturned. Holmes, elaborating in 1980 on his abortion views, wrote that rape victims rarely get pregnant. He later apologized. Opponents also have voiced concerns about how committed Holmes and Pryor are to the separation of church and state. Holmes once said that "Christianity, in principle, cannot accept subordination to the political authorities," and Pryor has said that "the challenge of the next millennium will be to preserve the American experiment by restoring its Christian perspective."

Fiedler said the notion that people of strong faith can't sit on the federal bench is "ridiculous on its face."

"It's not their religious views that are doing this but rather the way in which their political views intertwine," she said.

The charges also don't sit well in the office of Leahy, the ranking member of the Senate Judiciary Committee, who is himself a Catholic. Leahy spokesman David Carle said the senator "has always firmly believed and firmly stated that there never should be a religious test for judicial nominees."

"In talks with small groups on the religious right, not intended for general audiences, Senator Hatch for several months has planted seeds alleging a 'religious test,'" Carle said.

But he called the allegation of such a test a "detestable charge" and a "blatant lie that is plainly refuted by the facts themselves." Democrats have confirmed 136 nominees, most of whom "presumably share the administration's right-to-life philosophy, and some of these ... presumably are Christians," Carle said.

As to judges' faiths generally, the Federal Judiciary Center keeps statistics on judges' race, ethnicity and gender but not their religion.

"We don't have any complete way of knowing how many Catholics, how many Hindus, how many Protestants, how many agnostics, et cetera, there are," said Dick Carelli, spokesman at the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts.

Leahy's staff was particularly troubled by the July 13 comments of Andrea Lafferty, executive director of the Traditional Family Values Coalition, a pro-life program,

"Washington Journal."

"There's a lot of anti-Christian bigotry coming out of the United States Senate," Lafferty said.

"Senator Leahy has never met a Christian that he likes. He is one of the most anti-Christian members in Congress, and he continues to play that out over and over, particularly with these judicial nominees," Lafferty said.

Leahy was attending Mass at the time the program aired, Carle said.

Frances Kissling, president of Catholics for a Free Choice, said it was "despicable" to suggest that senators' oppositions to certain nominees were related to the nominees' religion, but, she said, such tactics were only marginally effective.

"I think these are fringe campaigns that should not be blown up out of proportion. In the mainstream, nobody pays attention to this. This is go-nowhere stuff," Kissling said.

Nan Aron, president of the liberal advocacy group Alliance for Justice, said the religion issue was "extraneous and irrelevant."

"And it also is an effort of Pryor's supporters and some of the senators to distract attention away from Pryor's dangerous views on so many issues," she said.

Ray Flynn, former mayor of Boston and U.S. ambassador to the Vatican, said he isn't making arguments like those advanced by Lafferty, but he does believe the Catholic issue is a valid one.

Yes, the fight over Pryor and some other judicial nominees is about abortion, but one can't divorce Pryor's views on abortion from his faith, said Flynn, president of the advocacy group Your Catholic Voice.

"The fact is, if you're a faithful Catholic and you follow the principles and the values of the Catholic church, you can't be pro-choice. You have to be pro-life," he said.

Flynn, a lifelong Democrat who described himself as pro-life, pro-family and pro-poor, said he doesn't see his group as part of the religious right. In fact, he said, faithful Catholics were not altogether welcome in either party.

Your Catholic Voice sent an e-mail to 170,000 people calling for Catholics to support Pryor, saying he was a "Catholic faithful citizen with a stellar record of public service and competency in the law."

The response they received was "significant," Flynn said, and called their effort "the type of Catholic political activism that is necessary."

Flynn's national field director, Bill May, said Pryor's religion was far from irrelevant.

"Does a conscience guided by faith disqualify him from service on the Court of Appeals?" he asked.

"That's a legitimate question," he said.

The Judiciary Committee's vote on Pryor, which has been delayed four times, now is scheduled for Wednesday. Kuhl and Holmes have both received committee approval, and their nominations await action before the full Senate.

Opinion Columnist Quin Hillyer

A late attack on Pryor, courtesy of purloined memos

07/16/03

Using pilfered documents, Democrats on the U.S. Senate Judiciary Committee are making a last-minute attempt to derail the nomination of Alabama Attorney General Bill Pryor for a seat on the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Pryor's first problem is that, as an elected official and a participant in the political process, he has helped raise campaign contributions for his political party. How shocking. Next we'll discover that senators, too, raise money.

Pryor's second problem is that he answered a written question too precisely. This was a bad mistake. Faced with an open-ended question, Pryor should have made clear that his answer was not definitive. This he failed to do.

What this all involves is Pryor's role in helping found a group called the Republican Attorneys General Association (RAGA). U.S. Sen. Russ Feingold, D-Wis., the famed campaign finance reformer, asked Pryor at his June 11 committee hearing if a certain scenario, involving a donation to RAGA from a corporation that might one day be investigated by a state attorney general, would present at least the appearance of conflict of interest given your role in RAGA?

Feingold's question was purely hypothetical. Pryor answered that in no instance has he solicited funds from a company under investigation or otherwise failed in ensuring that the law is enforced against any potential contributor.

In a written follow-up, Feingold asked: Are you aware of any companies in the State of Alabama that are or were members of RAGA? Were you involved in the solicitation of any of these companies? If so, which companies?

To be a member of RAGA, as Pryor earlier had explained, required a contribution of at least $5,000. Pryor also had previously explained that at the request of RAGA's staff, he did make some fundraising calls, but that the Republican National Committee kept all records of who donated when -- and that the RNC co-mingled RAGA funds with money for Republican governors and other state officials.

Pryor's answer to Feingold's question about Alabama companies was as follows: I am unaware of any Alabama companies being members of RAGA.

Fast-forward to yesterday. That's when committee staff contacted two former RAGA staffers, Ben Dupuy in Washington, D.C., and Claire Austin in Montgomery. They played phone tag with Austin, but were able to interview Dupuy. He said they asked if Pryor made fundraising calls to companies in Alabama. He said he told them Austin would know, because she was the one who handled fundraising.

Dupuy also said the process was mostly staff-driven. Documents show that RAGA staff had to plead with Republican attorneys general to secure a random hour on their schedules to make such calls. It's not as if every AG kept a record, of who the RAGA members were, in their wallets, Dupuy told me.

What was the point of all this? Apparently, to find some way to read certain documents as if to show that Pryor should have been aware that Alabama companies are RAGA members.

Would Bill Pryor know specifically who were members of RAGA? Claire Austin repeated a question of mine, rhetorically. I kinda doubt it. As a staff person, of course I remember all that stuff. ... That's what I did for a living.

Nevertheless, the committee has documents showing that Bill Pryor did ask some Alabama companies to contribute to RAGA. And some companies with Alabama subsidiaries, such as the Southern Company out of Atlanta (parent to Alabama Power), did become RAGA members.

Austin said the only Southern Company people she remembers attending RAGA events were out of their Washington office.

As for conflicts of interest, Austin said that Bill would not make any calls to the Microsoft people because there was pending litigation nationwide. Pryor was that way about tobacco companies, too. In short, Pryor avoided any potential ethical conflicts that he saw.

Still, a friendly critic could say that Pryor's answer to Feingold wasn't good enough. Yes, he was unaware that any Alabama-based companies were members. (It's still not clear whether any were.) But he perhaps should have said that certainly Alabama companies -- ones not under any investigation -- were asked to join, and that some may well have contributed at or below the membership level. Not, as Jerry Seinfeld would say, that there's anything wrong with that.

By this time, the committee Democrats were searching for a potential reason to assume that Pryor might have known that somewhere along the line there may have been an appearance of a conflict of interest. Obviously, that's about four removes from anything that should rightly disqualify a judicial nominee.

But what led them to this trail of questions is more interesting. Those documents they had -- documents that gave them more information about RAGA than Pryor himself has access to -- came from a former secretary of Claire Austin's by the name of Kelly Foradori. Foradori stopped working for Austin at the end of 1999, after helping with RAGA's first-ever major fundraiser (on Kiawah Island, S.C.).

Austin says she remembers confronting Foradori then to ask if Foradori retained any documents. Turns out, her suspicions were right. Foradori e-mailed those documents to the committee. Most were memos from Austin to various donors. Only a few mention Pryor. But they do show names and affiliations of people who were scheduled to attend some RAGA events.

Foradori's motive in all this is unclear. When reached by cell phone yesterday, before I could even identify myself, she told me: I don't have any comment for you, and please do not call my cell phone again.

What is known is that Foradori was a longtime employee of lobbyist Lanny Young -- and a highly paid one at that, said Austin. Austin briefly had a business with Young, and she said Foradori came with Young (already making what for a clerical employee was a hefty salary) when Austin and Young joined forces.

Lanny Young last month pleaded guilty to bribing Nick Bailey, a top aide to former Alabama Gov. Don Siegelman. Bill Pryor's office is working in conjunction with federal Justice Department officials in the ongoing investigation involving Young, Bailey and others in the Siegelman orbit.

Now Foradori, at least at one time a close associate and employee of Young's, has sent Austin's RAGA documents -- retained against Austin's wishes more than three years ago -- to committee staffers representing U.S. Sen. Ted Kennedy, D-Mass., a leading Pryor opponent.

I think I smell a dirty political payback for an attorney general doing his job, which is prosecuting people for crimes.

But having looked at those documents myself, I see no smoking gun -- nor, for that matter, any gunpowder or bullets or even anything approaching a crime or ethical transgression, that would rightly block Pryor's nomination. Because when it comes to following the law, Bill Pryor is always precise.

Sometimes to his own political detriment.

More Bad Judges
by JACK NEWFIELD

[from the January 26, 2004 issue]

Here comes the sequel to the Scalia Clones and Thomas Clowns. Karl Rove's White House laboratory has litmus-tested and shipped another batch of extremist nominees to the Senate Judiciary Committee for its members' consent, after not asking for their advice. Hearings are expected to begin soon after Congress reconvenes at the end of January.

These nominees will get the deepest possible scrutiny because of a curiously underreported scandal. In a new excess of zealotry, Republican staffers have stooped to snooping--hacking into the computers of Judiciary Committee Democrats Ted Kennedy and Richard Durbin, stealing fifteen confidential memos and disseminating them to "friendly" media outlets like the Wall Street Journal editorial page and the Washington Times. The e-mails, whose theft became known only when the Journal's editorial page quoted them in November, contained shocking revelations like the fact that Democrats are in touch with the NAACP Legal Defense Fund and People for the American Way.

Judiciary Committee chair Orrin Hatch eventually admitted the hacking. He suspended (with pay) one of his own junior staffers and declared himself "mortified" and "shocked," adding, "There is no excuse that can justify these improper actions." It now appears that Manuel Miranda, a senior aide to Senate majority leader Bill Frist, distributed the e-mails to right-wing lobbying groups and propaganda outfits. Miranda previously worked for the Republicans on the Judiciary Committee and was a public advocate for defeated Bush nominees like Miguel Estrada.

When reached at home, Miranda took the position that "there was no wrongdoing." He added, "The bottom line here is that the technology staff of the Democrats was negligent. They put these memos in a shared hard drive. It was like putting the memos on our desk. The Kennedy and Durbin memos are not Senate business. They are collusive, partisan politics. No Senate rule was violated. There was no hacking, no breaking and entering." Senate Democratic staffers dispute this, saying whoever hacked into their computer files needed a password. The computer invasion is being investigated by Senate sergeant-at-arms William Pickle, who has hired counterespionage expert David Lang.

The combination of more noxious nominations and these dirty tricks has upped the ante in the current judicial filibuster fight, in which the Democrats have so far blocked six Bush nominees. Some evangelical Christian and "family values" pressure groups, plus Senator Trent Lott, are urging Frist to use the "nuclear option" to abolish judicial filibusters. One such option involves having whichever GOP senator is presiding over the Senate at the time rule a filibuster against a nominee out of order and then rule that his position needs only fifty-one votes to be sustained, not the sixty needed to end debate. Some scholars, however, believe the "nuclear option" is unconstitutional and would end up in the courts. Democrats say it will shut down the Senate if used.

Senators Kennedy, Durbin, Charles Schumer, Tom Daschle, Patrick Leahy and their allies began their strategy of filibustering only against what they regarded as "the worst of the worst" Bush nominees in 2002, thinking that what they were attempting was intellectually and morally necessary but that they might pay a price in short-term politics, being seen as obstructionist in the court of public opinion. Now they think they are winning the politics, too. For example, the Washington Post editorial page, which supported Estrada's nomination, has opposed several recent Bush nominees as outside the mainstream. The Republicans are the ones who are coming across as intolerant fanatics. Democrats have used the filibuster only against a half-dozen out of 175 Bush nominees; by comparison, GOP senators blocked more than sixty of Bill Clinton's nominees--most by never giving them a hearing or a vote.

The surprising success of the Democrats' strategy has caused stresses and dissension within the Republican coalition. The religious right and antichoice activists expect Bush and Frist to do more than lose cloture votes and deliver speeches calling liberals names. They want the "nuclear option" exercised. And they are muttering that Hatch and Frist are too liberal and lack the will to fight. But even the most conservative senators know they don't have the votes and that a Senate shutdown could generate a public opinion backlash against them, as the government shutdown did in 1995. In November they were reduced to using the pointless public relations stunt of a forty-hour Senate session that accomplished nothing and ended with the Democrats winning another round of cloture roll calls.

Bush's next wave of unfit nominees is now being vetted by the angry Democratic staff of the Judiciary Committee. Three of the twenty or so are clearly contenders for the "worst of the worst."

Brett Kavanaugh has no judicial experience and, at 38, would be one of the youngest members in the history of the Court of Appeals for the Washington, DC, Circuit--the bench that sent Antonin Scalia and Clarence Thomas directly to the Supreme Court. Kavanaugh is the principal author of Ken Starr's prurient final report to Congress on President Clinton. He drafted the grounds for impeachment and, after leaving the independent counsel's office, went to work at Starr's law firm, Kirkland & Ellis.

Kavanaugh has never participated in a trial. In his Judiciary Committee questionnaire, he was asked to list his ten most significant cases; four of those he cited did not even involve a courtroom appearance, and in two he merely filed a Supreme Court amicus curiae brief for a third party. Most recently, Kavanaugh has worked in the White House selecting Bush's judicial nominees, coordinating the unsuccessful nominations of Estrada and Priscilla Owen.

When he worked for Ken Starr, Kavanaugh spent a lot of his time trying to challenge President Clinton's assertions of executive privilege. But one of his jobs in the Bush White House has been to defend claims of executive privilege. Kavanaugh has blocked a Senate committee from getting to see Enron-related documents, and he wrote the executive order that blocked the release of presidential papers, despite a federal law requiring that they be made public after twelve years.

Meanwhile, a coalition of environmentalists, the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, the Alliance for Justice and the National Congress of American Indians is urging full investigation of alleged ethical improprieties by William Myers before hearings are scheduled for his nomination to the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit. As the solicitor for the Interior Department, Myers has participated in a series of decisions favorable to cattle, mining and timber interests, and damaging to public lands and Native American tribes. Even before he was nominated, environmentalists had filed an ethics complaint against him, accusing him of violating his recusal agreement by meeting with his former lobbying and legal clients. Of all the Bush Cabinet agencies, Interior is probably in the deepest collusion with special interests and campaign donors. But these politicized decisions tend to be administrative regulations so technical, obscure and localized in the West that they don't get on the national radar screen. For example, last March, the Interior Department gave notice that it was proposing weakening grazing regulations adopted by the Clinton Administration and upheld by the Supreme Court. As a lawyer and lobbyist, Myers had been active in challenging these same regulations.

Myers also wrote two separate law review articles defending Judge Robert Bork and attacking the Senate for rejecting Bork's nomination to the Supreme Court.

A third horror in the pipeline is Claude Allen, awaiting renomination to the Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit and now the Deputy Secretary for Health and Human Services. Allen has supported antichoice statutes and regulations; urged sexual abstinence as the solution to AIDS and teen pregnancy; and opposed expanded health insurance for poor children. Allen has been involved in Republican politics for many years. In fact, Allen, who is African-American, was Jesse Helms's press secretary during Helms's racist campaign for re-election in 1984.

Bush is trying to transform America through lifetime judicial appointments for this biased batch and their clones. The bottom line is that the reckless Bushies are willing to violate computer privacy and vandalize the Bill of Rights to expedite this transformation. George W. Bush was appointed President by the Supreme Court after losing the popular vote by more than 500,000. Now he is trying to use the courts to legislate a mandate the voters never gave him by abusing the power of appointment and ignoring the Constitution's "advise and consent" clause.

Questions of Faith Raised in Confirmations

Interest Groups Claim Democratic Senators Veto Catholic Nominees
July 21, 2003

By Brent Kendall
Daily Journal Staff Writer

WASHINGTON - The day after Bill Pryor, a nominee for the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, faced questions from Senate Democrats concerned about his views on abortion and the separation of church and state, Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, appeared on television and explained why he asked Pryor a set of questions that he had never posed to any other nominee.

"I got so upset yesterday that I actually did something I've never done before," Hatch told Chris Matthews on MSNBC's political talk show, "Hardball."

"I asked him what his religion was, knowing that he was Catholic. Just so everybody would know that when they were attacking his beliefs, they were attacking his Catholic beliefs," he said.

During Pryor's June 11 nomination hearing, Hatch asked the Alabama attorney general about his religious affiliation (Roman Catholic), whether he was active in his church (yes) and whether he believed in his religion (yes).

Senators on both sides of the aisle objected to Hatch's approach. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., said a nominee's religion "is irrelevant to our consideration," suggesting "just as we're supposed to be colorblind, we should be religious blind."

Arlen Specter, R-Pa., said, "There are enough questions to inquire into and enough substantive matters that [religion] ought to be out of bounds."

But Hatch said the questioning was necessary. Pryor had been smeared by interest groups, he said, hit below the belt by some of his opponents' criticisms and attacked for his religious faith.

"In all honesty, I think the Democrats forget there are two clauses in the First Amendment pertaining to religion - the Establishment Clause and the Free Exercise Clause," Hatch told Matthews.

"I think they've forgotten the Free Exercise Clause ... and, you know, it's getting so that a pro-life Catholic can't serve in the federal judiciary."

It's a position some conservative advocacy groups and Catholic organizations share. And, galvanized by the Pryor controversy, they are going public with arguments that nominees of strong religious faith cannot pass certain "tests" for approval set forth by Democrats.

The Democrats and liberal advocacy groups vigorously deny the charges and call them an attempt to distract attention from their legitimate concerns about contentious Bush nominees.

In addition to Pryor, two other pro-life Catholics are currently mired in the nomination wars: Arkansas District Court nominee James Leon Holmes and Los Angeles County Superior Court Judge Carolyn Kuhl, a nominee for the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Republicans soon may push forward on all three nominees, and some supporters are preparing to use the opportunity to make religion an issue.

The Committee for Justice, a group founded by C. Boyden Gray, White House counsel in the first Bush administration, is considering plans to run an ad campaign highlighting Democratic opposition to President Bush's nominees, with the possible theme, "Catholics Need Not Apply."

"Kuhl and Pryor both happen to be Catholic, and there is an argument to be made that with some of the attacks that have been made against them, the Democrats are backing themselves into a quasi-religious test where anybody who holds personal views that are orthodox religious views is automatically considered out of the mainstream and unacceptable for the federal bench," said Sean Rushton, the group's executive director.

"I think that's certainly a button we want to push," he said. "The Democrats may deny it, but actions speak louder than words."

Kuhl would not comment, saying, "As a nominee, I've maintained a 'no comment' position throughout, so I'm going to stay with that."

Joe Cella, who heads The Ave Maria List, a Catholic political action committee committed to electing pro-life members of Congress, said his people are working at the grass-roots level to publicize the issue.

Democrats engaged in "hostile questioning" of Pryor, he said.

"Their behavior is a dark example of the new anti-Catholicism, which is sort of the last acceptable prejudice in America."

The charges don't sit well with Catholics on the other side of the political spectrum or with other pro-choice advocates, who say the main issue with Pryor and some other nominees is abortion, not religion.

"What [Democrats] want to do is have nominees that are not going to ditch Roe v. Wade. They don't care whether these people are Catholics or not," said Sister Maureen Fiedler, host of the Washington, D.C.-based public radio series, "Interfaith Voices."

Pryor has called the Roe decision "the worst abomination of the history of constitutional law." Kuhl was involved in an unsuccessful 1985 attempt to have Roe overturned. Holmes, elaborating in 1980 on his abortion views, wrote that rape victims rarely get pregnant. He later apologized.

Opponents also have voiced concerns about how committed Holmes and Pryor are to the separation of church and state. Holmes once said that "Christianity, in principle, cannot accept subordination to the political authorities," and Pryor has said that "the challenge of the next millennium will be to preserve the American experiment by restoring its Christian perspective."

Fiedler said the notion that people of strong faith can't sit on the federal bench is "ridiculous on its face."

"It's not their religious views that are doing this but rather the way in which their political views intertwine," she said.

The charges also don't sit well in the office of Leahy, the ranking member of the Senate Judiciary Committee, who is himself a Catholic. Leahy spokesman David Carle said the senator "has always firmly believed and firmly stated that there never should be a religious test for judicial nominees."

"In talks with small groups on the religious right, not intended for general audiences, Senator Hatch for several months has planted seeds alleging a 'religious test,'" Carle said.

But he called the allegation of such a test a "detestable charge" and a "blatant lie that is plainly refuted by the facts themselves."

Democrats have confirmed 136 nominees, most of whom "presumably share the administration's right-to-life philosophy, and some of these ... presumably are Christians," Carle said.

As to judges' faiths generally, the Federal Judiciary Center keeps statistics on judges' race, ethnicity and gender but not their religion.

"We don't have any complete way of knowing how many Catholics, how many Hindus, how many Protestants, how many agnostics, et cetera, there are," said Dick Carelli, spokesman at the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts.

Leahy's staff was particularly troubled by the July 13 comments of Andrea Lafferty, executive director of the Traditional Family Values Coalition, a pro-life program,

"Washington Journal."

"There's a lot of anti-Christian bigotry coming out of the United States Senate," Lafferty said.

"Senator Leahy has never met a Christian that he likes. He is one of the most anti-Christian members in Congress, and he continues to play that out over and over, particularly with these judicial nominees," Lafferty said.

Leahy was attending Mass at the time the program aired, Carle said.

Frances Kissling, president of Catholics for a Free Choice, said it was "despicable" to suggest that senators' oppositions to certain nominees were related to the nominees' religion, but, she said, such tactics were only marginally effective.

"I think these are fringe campaigns that should not be blown up out of proportion. In the mainstream, nobody pays attention to this. This is go-nowhere stuff," Kissling said.

Nan Aron, president of the liberal advocacy group Alliance for Justice, said the religion issue was "extraneous and irrelevant."

"And it also is an effort of Pryor's supporters and some of the senators to distract attention away from Pryor's dangerous views on so many issues," she said.

Ray Flynn, former mayor of Boston and U.S. ambassador to the Vatican, said he isn't making arguments like those advanced by Lafferty, but he does believe the Catholic issue is a valid one.

Yes, the fight over Pryor and some other judicial nominees is about abortion, but one can't divorce Pryor's views on abortion from his faith, said Flynn, president of the advocacy group Your Catholic Voice.

"The fact is, if you're a faithful Catholic and you follow the principles and the values of the Catholic church, you can't be pro-choice. You have to be pro-life," he said.

Flynn, a lifelong Democrat who described himself as pro-life, pro-family and pro-poor, said he doesn't see his group as part of the religious right. In fact, he said, faithful Catholics were not altogether welcome in either party.

Your Catholic Voice sent an e-mail to 170,000 people calling for Catholics to support Pryor, saying he was a "Catholic faithful citizen with a stellar record of public service and competency in the law."

The response they received was "significant," Flynn said, and called their effort "the type of Catholic political activism that is necessary."

Flynn's national field director, Bill May, said Pryor's religion was far from irrelevant.

"Does a conscience guided by faith disqualify him from service on the Court of Appeals?" he asked.

"That's a legitimate question," he said.

The Judiciary Committee's vote on Pryor, which has been delayed four times, now is scheduled for Wednesday. Kuhl and Holmes have both received committee approval, and their nominations await action before the full Senate.

Questions of Faith Raised in Confirmations

Interest Groups Claim Democratic Senators Veto Catholic Nominees

WASHINGTON - The day after Bill Pryor, a nominee for the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, faced questions from Senate Democrats concerned about his views on abortion and the separation of church and state, Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, appeared on television and explained why he asked Pryor a set of questions that he had never posed to any other nominee.

"I got so upset yesterday that I actually did something I've never done before," Hatch told Chris Matthews on MSNBC's political talk show, "Hardball."

"I asked him what his religion was, knowing that he was Catholic. Just so everybody would know that when they were attacking his beliefs, they were attacking his Catholic beliefs," he said.

During Pryor's June 11 nomination hearing, Hatch asked the Alabama attorney general about his religious affiliation (Roman Catholic), whether he was active in his church (yes) and whether he believed in his religion (yes).

Senators on both sides of the aisle objected to Hatch's approach. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., said a nominee's religion "is irrelevant to our consideration," suggesting "just as we're supposed to be colorblind, we should be religious blind."

Arlen Specter, R-Pa., said, "There are enough questions to inquire into and enough substantive matters that [religion] ought to be out of bounds." But Hatch said the questioning was necessary. Pryor had been smeared by interest groups, he said, hit below the belt by some of his opponents' criticisms and attacked for his religious faith.

Opinion Columnist Quin Hillyer

A late attack on Pryor, courtesy of purloined memos

07/16/03

Using pilfered documents, Democrats on the U.S. Senate Judiciary Committee are making a last-minute attempt to derail the nomination of Alabama Attorney General Bill Pryor for a seat on the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Pryor's first problem is that, as an elected official and a participant in the political process, he has helped raise campaign contributions for his political party. How shocking. Next we'll discover that senators, too, raise money.

Pryor's second problem is that he answered a written question too precisely. This was a bad mistake. Faced with an open-ended question, Pryor should have made clear that his answer was not definitive. This he failed to do.

What this all involves is Pryor's role in helping found a group called the Republican Attorneys General Association (RAGA). U.S. Sen. Russ Feingold, D-Wis., the famed campaign finance reformer, asked Pryor at his June 11 committee hearing if a certain scenario, involving a donation to RAGA from a corporation that might one day be investigated by a state attorney general, would present at least the appearance of conflict of interest given your role in RAGA?

Feingold's question was purely hypothetical. Pryor answered that in no instance has he solicited funds from a company under investigation or otherwise failed in ensuring that the law is enforced against any potential contributor.

In a written follow-up, Feingold asked: Are you aware of any companies in the State of Alabama that are or were members of RAGA? Were you involved in the solicitation of any of these companies? If so, which companies?

To be a member of RAGA, as Pryor earlier had explained, required a contribution of at least $5,000. Pryor also had previously explained that at the request of RAGA's staff, he did make some fundraising calls, but that the Republican National Committee kept all records of who donated when -- and that the RNC co-mingled RAGA funds with money for Republican governors and other state officials.

Pryor's answer to Feingold's question about Alabama companies was as follows: I am unaware of any Alabama companies being members of RAGA.

Fast-forward to yesterday. That's when committee staff contacted two former RAGA staffers, Ben Dupuy in Washington, D.C., and Claire Austin in Montgomery. They played phone tag with Austin, but were able to interview Dupuy. He said they asked if Pryor made fundraising calls to companies in Alabama. He said he told them Austin would know, because she was the one who handled fundraising.

Dupuy also said the process was mostly staff-driven. Documents show that RAGA staff had to plead with Republican attorneys general to secure a random hour on their schedules to make such calls. It's not as if every AG kept a record, of who the RAGA members were, in their wallets, Dupuy told me.

What was the point of all this? Apparently, to find some way to read certain documents as if to show that Pryor should have been aware that Alabama companies are RAGA members.

Would Bill Pryor know specifically who were members of RAGA? Claire Austin repeated a question of mine, rhetorically. I kinda doubt it. As a staff person, of course I remember all that stuff. ... That's what I did for a living.

Nevertheless, the committee has documents showing that Bill Pryor did ask some Alabama companies to contribute to RAGA. And some companies with Alabama subsidiaries, such as the Southern Company out of Atlanta (parent to Alabama Power), did become RAGA members.

Austin said the only Southern Company people she remembers attending RAGA events were out of their Washington office.

As for conflicts of interest, Austin said that Bill would not make any calls to the Microsoft people because there was pending litigation nationwide. Pryor was that way about tobacco companies, too. In short, Pryor avoided any potential ethical conflicts that he saw.

Still, a friendly critic could say that Pryor's answer to Feingold wasn't good enough. Yes, he was unaware that any Alabama-based companies were members. (It's still not clear whether any were.) But he perhaps should have said that certainly Alabama companies -- ones not under any investigation -- were asked to join, and that some may well have contributed at or below the membership level. Not, as Jerry Seinfeld would say, that there's anything wrong with that.

By this time, the committee Democrats were searching for a potential reason to assume that Pryor might have known that somewhere along the line there may have been an appearance of a conflict of interest. Obviously, that's about four removes from anything that should rightly disqualify a judicial nominee.

But what led them to this trail of questions is more interesting. Those documents they had -- documents that gave them more information about RAGA than Pryor himself has access to -- came from a former secretary of Claire Austin's by the name of Kelly Foradori. Foradori stopped working for Austin at the end of 1999, after helping with RAGA's first-ever major fundraiser (on Kiawah Island, S.C.).

Austin says she remembers confronting Foradori then to ask if Foradori retained any documents. Turns out, her suspicions were right. Foradori e-mailed those documents to the committee. Most were memos from Austin to various donors. Only a few mention Pryor. But they do show names and affiliations of people who were scheduled to attend some RAGA events.

Foradori's motive in all this is unclear. When reached by cell phone yesterday, before I could even identify myself, she told me: I don't have any comment for you, and please do not call my cell phone again.

What is known is that Foradori was a longtime employee of lobbyist Lanny Young -- and a highly paid one at that, said Austin. Austin briefly had a business with Young, and she said Foradori came with Young (already making what for a clerical employee was a hefty salary) when Austin and Young joined forces.

Lanny Young last month pleaded guilty to bribing Nick Bailey, a top aide to former Alabama Gov. Don Siegelman. Bill Pryor's office is working in conjunction with federal Justice Department officials in the ongoing investigation involving Young, Bailey and others in the Siegelman orbit.

Now Foradori, at least at one time a close associate and employee of Young's, has sent Austin's RAGA documents -- retained against Austin's wishes more than three years ago -- to committee staffers representing U.S. Sen. Ted Kennedy, D-Mass., a leading Pryor opponent.

I think I smell a dirty political payback for an attorney general doing his job, which is prosecuting people for crimes.

But having looked at those documents myself, I see no smoking gun -- nor, for that matter, any gunpowder or bullets or even anything approaching a crime or ethical transgression, that would rightly block Pryor's nomination. Because when it comes to following the law, Bill Pryor is always precise.

Sometimes to his own political detriment.

Questions of Faith Raised in Confirmations

Interest Groups Claim Democratic Senators Veto Catholic Nominees
July 21, 2003

By Brent Kendall
Daily Journal Staff Writer

WASHINGTON - The day after Bill Pryor, a nominee for the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, faced questions from Senate Democrats concerned about his views on abortion and the separation of church and state, Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, appeared on television and explained why he asked Pryor a set of questions that he had never posed to any other nominee.

"I got so upset yesterday that I actually did something I've never done before," Hatch told Chris Matthews on MSNBC's political talk show, "Hardball."

"I asked him what his religion was, knowing that he was Catholic. Just so everybody would know that when they were attacking his beliefs, they were attacking his Catholic beliefs," he said.

During Pryor's June 11 nomination hearing, Hatch asked the Alabama attorney general about his religious affiliation (Roman Catholic), whether he was active in his church (yes) and whether he believed in his religion (yes).

Senators on both sides of the aisle objected to Hatch's approach. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., said a nominee's religion "is irrelevant to our consideration," suggesting "just as we're supposed to be colorblind, we should be religious blind."

Arlen Specter, R-Pa., said, "There are enough questions to inquire into and enough substantive matters that [religion] ought to be out of bounds." But Hatch said the questioning was necessary. Pryor had been smeared by interest groups, he said, hit below the belt by some of his opponents' criticisms and attacked for his religious faith.

"In all honesty, I think the Democrats forget there are two clauses in the First Amendment pertaining to religion - the Establishment Clause and the Free Exercise Clause," Hatch told Matthews.

"I think they've forgotten the Free Exercise Clause ... and, you know, it's getting so that a pro-life Catholic can't serve in the federal judiciary." It's a position some conservative advocacy groups and Catholic organizations share. And, galvanized by the Pryor controversy, they are going public with arguments that nominees of strong religious faith cannot pass certain "tests" for approval set forth by Democrats. The Democrats and liberal advocacy groups vigorously deny the charges and call them an attempt to distract attention from their legitimate concerns about contentious Bush nominees.

In addition to Pryor, two other pro-life Catholics are currently mired in the nomination wars: Arkansas District Court nominee James Leon Holmes and Los Angeles County Superior Court Judge Carolyn Kuhl, a nominee for the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Republicans soon may push forward on all three nominees, and some supporters are preparing to use the opportunity to make religion an issue. The Committee for Justice, a group founded by C. Boyden Gray, White House counsel in the first Bush administration, is considering plans to run an ad campaign highlighting Democratic opposition to President Bush's nominees, with the possible theme, "Catholics Need Not Apply."

"Kuhl and Pryor both happen to be Catholic, and there is an argument to be made that with some of the attacks that have been made against them, the Democrats are backing themselves into a quasi-religious test where anybody who holds personal views that are orthodox religious views is automatically considered out of the mainstream and unacceptable for the federal bench," said Sean Rushton, the group's executive director.

"I think that's certainly a button we want to push," he said. "The Democrats may deny it, but actions speak louder than words." Kuhl would not comment, saying, "As a nominee, I've maintained a 'no comment' position throughout, so I'm going to stay with that."

Joe Cella, who heads The Ave Maria List, a Catholic political action committee committed to electing pro-life members of Congress, said his people are working at the grass-roots level to publicize the issue.

Democrats engaged in "hostile questioning" of Pryor, he said.

"Their behavior is a dark example of the new anti-Catholicism, which is sort of the last acceptable prejudice in America."

The charges don't sit well with Catholics on the other side of the political spectrum or with other pro-choice advocates, who say the main issue with Pryor and some other nominees is abortion, not religion.

"What [Democrats] want to do is have nominees that are not going to ditch Roe v. Wade. They don't care whether these people are Catholics or not," said Sister Maureen Fiedler, host of the Washington, D.C.-based public radio series, "Interfaith Voices."

Pryor has called the Roe decision "the worst abomination of the history of constitutional law." Kuhl was involved in an unsuccessful 1985 attempt to have Roe overturned. Holmes, elaborating in 1980 on his abortion views, wrote that rape victims rarely get pregnant. He later apologized. Opponents also have voiced concerns about how committed Holmes and Pryor are to the separation of church and state. Holmes once said that "Christianity, in principle, cannot accept subordination to the political authorities," and Pryor has said that "the challenge of the next millennium will be to preserve the American experiment by restoring its Christian perspective."

Fiedler said the notion that people of strong faith can't sit on the federal bench is "ridiculous on its face."

"It's not their religious views that are doing this but rather the way in which their political views intertwine," she said.

The charges also don't sit well in the office of Leahy, the ranking member of the Senate Judiciary Committee, who is himself a Catholic. Leahy spokesman David Carle said the senator "has always firmly believed and firmly stated that there never should be a religious test for judicial nominees."

"In talks with small groups on the religious right, not intended for general audiences, Senator Hatch for several months has planted seeds alleging a 'religious test,'" Carle said.

But he called the allegation of such a test a "detestable charge" and a "blatant lie that is plainly refuted by the facts themselves." Democrats have confirmed 136 nominees, most of whom "presumably share the administration's right-to-life philosophy, and some of these ... presumably are Christians," Carle said.

As to judges' faiths generally, the Federal Judiciary Center keeps statistics on judges' race, ethnicity and gender but not their religion. "We don't have any complete way of knowing how many Catholics, how many Hindus, how many Protestants, how many agnostics, et cetera, there are," said Dick Carelli, spokesman at the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts.

Leahy's staff was particularly troubled by the July 13 comments of Andrea Lafferty, executive director of the Traditional Family Values Coalition, a pro-life program,

"Washington Journal."

"There's a lot of anti-Christian bigotry coming out of the United States Senate," Lafferty said.

"Senator Leahy has never met a Christian that he likes. He is one of the most anti-Christian members in Congress, and he continues to play that out over and over, particularly with these judicial nominees," Lafferty said.

Leahy was attending Mass at the time the program aired, Carle said.

Frances Kissling, president of Catholics for a Free Choice, said it was "despicable" to suggest that senators' oppositions to certain nominees were related to the nominees' religion, but, she said, such tactics were only marginally effective.

"I think these are fringe campaigns that should not be blown up out of proportion. In the mainstream, nobody pays attention to this. This is go-nowhere stuff," Kissling said.

Nan Aron, president of the liberal advocacy group Alliance for Justice, said the religion issue was "extraneous and irrelevant."

"And it also is an effort of Pryor's supporters and some of the senators to distract attention away from Pryor's dangerous views on so many issues," she said.

Ray Flynn, former mayor of Boston and U.S. ambassador to the Vatican, said he isn't making arguments like those advanced by Lafferty, but he does believe the Catholic issue is a valid one.

Yes, the fight over Pryor and some other judicial nominees is about abortion, but one can't divorce Pryor's views on abortion from his faith, said Flynn, president of the advocacy group Your Catholic Voice.

"The fact is, if you're a faithful Catholic and you follow the principles and the values of the Catholic church, you can't be pro-choice. You have to be pro-life," he said.

Flynn, a lifelong Democrat who described himself as pro-life, pro-family and pro-poor, said he doesn't see his group as part of the religious right. In fact, he said, faithful Catholics were not altogether welcome in either party.

Your Catholic Voice sent an e-mail to 170,000 people calling for Catholics to support Pryor, saying he was a "Catholic faithful citizen with a stellar record of public service and competency in the law."

The response they received was "significant," Flynn said, and called their effort "the type of Catholic political activism that is necessary."

Flynn's national field director, Bill May, said Pryor's religion was far from irrelevant.

"Does a conscience guided by faith disqualify him from service on the Court of Appeals?" he asked.

"That's a legitimate question," he said.

The Judiciary Committee's vote on Pryor, which has been delayed four times, now is scheduled for Wednesday. Kuhl and Holmes have both received committee approval, and their nominations await action before the full Senate.

Questions of Faith Raised in Confirmations

Interest Groups Claim Democratic Senators Veto Catholic Nominees
July 21, 2003

By Brent Kendall
Daily Journal Staff Writer

WASHINGTON - The day after Bill Pryor, a nominee for the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, faced questions from Senate Democrats concerned about his views on abortion and the separation of church and state, Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, appeared on television and explained why he asked Pryor a set of questions that he had never posed to any other nominee.

"I got so upset yesterday that I actually did something I've never done before," Hatch told Chris Matthews on MSNBC's political talk show, "Hardball."

"I asked him what his religion was, knowing that he was Catholic. Just so everybody would know that when they were attacking his beliefs, they were attacking his Catholic beliefs," he said.

During Pryor's June 11 nomination hearing, Hatch asked the Alabama attorney general about his religious affiliation (Roman Catholic), whether he was active in his church (yes) and whether he believed in his religion (yes).

Senators on both sides of the aisle objected to Hatch's approach. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., said a nominee's religion "is irrelevant to our consideration," suggesting "just as we're supposed to be colorblind, we should be religious blind."

Arlen Specter, R-Pa., said, "There are enough questions to inquire into and enough substantive matters that [religion] ought to be out of bounds."

But Hatch said the questioning was necessary. Pryor had been smeared by interest groups, he said, hit below the belt by some of his opponents' criticisms and attacked for his religious faith.

"In all honesty, I think the Democrats forget there are two clauses in the First Amendment pertaining to religion - the Establishment Clause and the Free Exercise Clause," Hatch told Matthews.

"I think they've forgotten the Free Exercise Clause ... and, you know, it's getting so that a pro-life Catholic can't serve in the federal judiciary."

It's a position some conservative advocacy groups and Catholic organizations share. And, galvanized by the Pryor controversy, they are going public with arguments that nominees of strong religious faith cannot pass certain "tests" for approval set forth by Democrats.

The Democrats and liberal advocacy groups vigorously deny the charges and call them an attempt to distract attention from their legitimate concerns about contentious Bush nominees.

In addition to Pryor, two other pro-life Catholics are currently mired in the nomination wars: Arkansas District Court nominee James Leon Holmes and Los Angeles County Superior Court Judge Carolyn Kuhl, a nominee for the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Republicans soon may push forward on all three nominees, and some supporters are preparing to use the opportunity to make religion an issue.

The Committee for Justice, a group founded by C. Boyden Gray, White House counsel in the first Bush administration, is considering plans to run an ad campaign highlighting Democratic opposition to President Bush's nominees, with the possible theme, "Catholics Need Not Apply."

"Kuhl and Pryor both happen to be Catholic, and there is an argument to be made that with some of the attacks that have been made against them, the Democrats are backing themselves into a quasi-religious test where anybody who holds personal views that are orthodox religious views is automatically considered out of the mainstream and unacceptable for the federal bench," said Sean Rushton, the group's executive director.

"I think that's certainly a button we want to push," he said. "The Democrats may deny it, but actions speak louder than words."

Kuhl would not comment, saying, "As a nominee, I've maintained a 'no comment' position throughout, so I'm going to stay with that."

Joe Cella, who heads The Ave Maria List, a Catholic political action committee committed to electing pro-life members of Congress, said his people are working at the grass-roots level to publicize the issue.

Democrats engaged in "hostile questioning" of Pryor, he said.

"Their behavior is a dark example of the new anti-Catholicism, which is sort of the last acceptable prejudice in America."

The charges don't sit well with Catholics on the other side of the political spectrum or with other pro-choice advocates, who say the main issue with Pryor and some other nominees is abortion, not religion.

"What [Democrats] want to do is have nominees that are not going to ditch Roe v. Wade. They don't care whether these people are Catholics or not," said Sister Maureen Fiedler, host of the Washington, D.C.-based public radio series, "Interfaith Voices."

Pryor has called the Roe decision "the worst abomination of the history of constitutional law." Kuhl was involved in an unsuccessful 1985 attempt to have Roe overturned. Holmes, elaborating in 1980 on his abortion views, wrote that rape victims rarely get pregnant. He later apologized.

Opponents also have voiced concerns about how committed Holmes and Pryor are to the separation of church and state. Holmes once said that "Christianity, in principle, cannot accept subordination to the political authorities," and Pryor has said that "the challenge of the next millennium will be to preserve the American experiment by restoring its Christian perspective."

Fiedler said the notion that people of strong faith can't sit on the federal bench is "ridiculous on its face."

"It's not their religious views that are doing this but rather the way in which their political views intertwine," she said.

The discharge effort is over....it was not expected to be effective. It was used to raise the profile of the nominees and the situation. The next step will be to push for a hearing for the group...letter from Frist to Hatch requesting hearing is expected soon. Thanks.

The discharge effort is over....it was not expected to be effective. It was used to raise the profile of the nominees and the situation. The next step will be to push for a hearing for the group...letter from Frist to Hatch requesting hearing is expected soon. Thanks.

RESOLUTIONS PLACED ON EXECUTIVE CALENDAR -- (Senate - July 07, 2003)

Mr. FRIST. I now send a resolution to the desk to discharge from the Judiciary Committee the nomination of David W. McKeague, of Michigan, to be a United States Circuit Judge for the Sixth Circuit. I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, this nomination for the Sixth Circuit, and the others that will be made by the majority leader, have not had the benefit of any hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee. I believe that hearing should take place before a lifetime appointment is given to any person to the Circuit Court. So, on behalf of Senators CARL LEVIN and DEBBIE STABENOW of Michigan, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I now send a resolution to discharge from the Judiciary Committee the nomination of Susan Bieke Nielson of Michigan to be a U.S. circuit judge for the Sixth Circuit, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, for the same reasons, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. FRIST. I now send a resolution to discharge from the Judiciary Committee the nomination of Henry W. Saad of Michigan to be a U.S. circuit judge for the Sixth Circuit, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, for the same reasons, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I now send a resolution to discharge from the Judiciary Committee the nomination of Richard Griffin of Michigan to be a U.S. circuit judge for the Sixth Circuit, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DURBIN. For the same reasons, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

The foregoing resolutions will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

Mr. FRIST. I now send a resolution to the desk to discharge from the Judiciary Committee the nomination of David W. McKeague, of Michigan, to be a United States Circuit Judge for the Sixth Circuit. I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, this nomination for the Sixth Circuit, and the others that will be made by the majority leader, have not had the benefit of any hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee. I believe that hearing should take place before a lifetime appointment is given to any person to the Circuit Court. So, on behalf of Senators CARL LEVIN and DEBBIE STABENOW of Michigan, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I now send a resolution to discharge from the Judiciary Committee the nomination of Susan Bieke Nielson of Michigan to be a U.S. circuit judge for the Sixth Circuit, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, for the same reasons, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. FRIST. I now send a resolution to discharge from the Judiciary Committee the nomination of Henry W. Saad of Michigan to be a U.S. circuit judge for the Sixth Circuit, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, for the same reasons, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I now send a resolution to discharge from the Judiciary Committee the nomination of Richard Griffin of Michigan to be a U.S. circuit judge for the Sixth Circuit, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DURBIN. For the same reasons, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

The foregoing resolutions will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

Interest Groups Claim Democratic Senators Veto Catholic Nominees
July 21, 2003

By Brent Kendall
Daily Journal Staff Writer

WASHINGTON - The day after Bill Pryor, a nominee for the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, faced questions from Senate Democrats concerned about his views on abortion and the separation of church and state, Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, appeared on television and explained why he asked Pryor a set of questions that he had never posed to any other nominee.

"I got so upset yesterday that I actually did something I've never done before," Hatch told Chris Matthews on MSNBC's political talk show, "Hardball."

"I asked him what his religion was, knowing that he was Catholic. Just so everybody would know that when they were attacking his beliefs, they were attacking his Catholic beliefs," he said.

During Pryor's June 11 nomination hearing, Hatch asked the Alabama attorney general about his religious affiliation (Roman Catholic), whether he was active in his church (yes) and whether he believed in his religion (yes).

Senators on both sides of the aisle objected to Hatch's approach. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., said a nominee's religion "is irrelevant to our consideration," suggesting "just as we're supposed to be colorblind, we should be religious blind."

Arlen Specter, R-Pa., said, "There are enough questions to inquire into and enough substantive matters that [religion] ought to be out of bounds."

But Hatch said the questioning was necessary. Pryor had been smeared by interest groups, he said, hit below the belt by some of his opponents' criticisms and attacked for his religious faith.

"In all honesty, I think the Democrats forget there are two clauses in the First Amendment pertaining to religion - the Establishment Clause and the Free Exercise Clause," Hatch told Matthews.

"I think they've forgotten the Free Exercise Clause ... and, you know, it's getting so that a pro-life Catholic can't serve in the federal judiciary."

It's a position some conservative advocacy groups and Catholic organizations share. And, galvanized by the Pryor controversy, they are going public with arguments that nominees of strong religious faith cannot pass certain "tests" for approval set forth by Democrats.

The Democrats and liberal advocacy groups vigorously deny the charges and call them an attempt to distract attention from their legitimate concerns about contentious Bush nominees.

In addition to Pryor, two other pro-life Catholics are currently mired in the nomination wars: Arkansas District Court nominee James Leon Holmes and Los Angeles County Superior Court Judge Carolyn Kuhl, a nominee for the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Republicans soon may push forward on all three nominees, and some supporters are preparing to use the opportunity to make religion an issue.

The Committee for Justice, a group founded by C. Boyden Gray, White House counsel in the first Bush administration, is considering plans to run an ad campaign highlighting Democratic opposition to President Bush's nominees, with the possible theme, "Catholics Need Not Apply."

"Kuhl and Pryor both happen to be Catholic, and there is an argument to be made that with some of the attacks that have been made against them, the Democrats are backing themselves into a quasi-religious test where anybody who holds personal views that are orthodox religious views is automatically considered out of the mainstream and unacceptable for the federal bench," said Sean Rushton, the group's executive director.

"I think that's certainly a button we want to push," he said. "The Democrats may deny it, but actions speak louder than words."

Kuhl would not comment, saying, "As a nominee, I've maintained a 'no comment' position throughout, so I'm going to stay with that."

Joe Cella, who heads The Ave Maria List, a Catholic political action committee committed to electing pro-life members of Congress, said his people are working at the grass-roots level to publicize the issue.

Democrats engaged in "hostile questioning" of Pryor, he said.

"Their behavior is a dark example of the new anti-Catholicism, which is sort of the last acceptable prejudice in America."

The charges don't sit well with Catholics on the other side of the political spectrum or with other pro-choice advocates, who say the main issue with Pryor and some other nominees is abortion, not religion.

"What [Democrats] want to do is have nominees that are not going to ditch Roe v. Wade. They don't care whether these people are Catholics or not," said Sister Maureen Fiedler, host of the Washington, D.C.-based public radio series, "Interfaith Voices."

Pryor has called the Roe decision "the worst abomination of the history of constitutional law." Kuhl was involved in an unsuccessful 1985 attempt to have Roe overturned. Holmes, elaborating in 1980 on his abortion views, wrote that rape victims rarely get pregnant. He later apologized.

Opponents also have voiced concerns about how committed Holmes and Pryor are to the separation of church and state. Holmes once said that "Christianity, in principle, cannot accept subordination to the political authorities," and Pryor has said that "the challenge of the next millennium will be to preserve the American experiment by restoring its Christian perspective."

Fiedler said the notion that people of strong faith can't sit on the federal bench is "ridiculous on its face."

"It's not their religious views that are doing this but rather the way in which their political views intertwine," she said.

The charges also don't sit well in the office of Leahy, the ranking member of the Senate Judiciary Committee, who is himself a Catholic. Leahy spokesman David Carle said the senator "has always firmly believed and firmly stated that there never should be a religious test for judicial nominees."

"In talks with small groups on the religious right, not intended for general audiences, Senator Hatch for several months has planted seeds alleging a 'religious test,'" Carle said.

But he called the allegation of such a test a "detestable charge" and a "blatant lie that is plainly refuted by the facts themselves."

Democrats have confirmed 136 nominees, most of whom "presumably share the administration's right-to-life philosophy, and some of these ... presumably are Christians," Carle said.

As to judges' faiths generally, the Federal Judiciary Center keeps statistics on judges' race, ethnicity and gender but not their religion.

"We don't have any complete way of knowing how many Catholics, how many Hindus, how many Protestants, how many agnostics, et cetera, there are," said Dick Carelli, spokesman at the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts.

Leahy's staff was particularly troubled by the July 13 comments of Andrea Lafferty, executive director of the Traditional Family Values Coalition, a pro-life program,

EXP-18-2143-F-001534

"Washington Journal."

"There's a lot of anti-Christian bigotry coming out of the United States Senate," Lafferty said.

"Senator Leahy has never met a Christian that he likes. He is one of the most anti-Christian members in Congress, and he continues to play that out over and over, particularly with these judicial nominees," Lafferty said.

Leahy was attending Mass at the time the program aired, Carle said.

Frances Kissling, president of Catholics for a Free Choice, said it was "despicable" to suggest that senators' oppositions to certain nominees were related to the nominees' religion, but, she said, such tactics were only marginally effective.

"I think these are fringe campaigns that should not be blown up out of proportion. In the mainstream, nobody pays attention to this. This is go-nowhere stuff," Kissling said.

Nan Aron, president of the liberal advocacy group Alliance for Justice, said the religion issue was "extraneous and irrelevant."

"And it also is an effort of Pryor's supporters and some of the senators to distract attention away from Pryor's dangerous views on so many issues," she said.

Ray Flynn, former mayor of Boston and U.S. ambassador to the Vatican, said he isn't making arguments like those advanced by Lafferty, but he does believe the Catholic issue is a valid one.

Yes, the fight over Pryor and some other judicial nominees is about abortion, but one can't divorce Pryor's views on abortion from his faith, said Flynn, president of the advocacy group Your Catholic Voice.

"The fact is, if you're a faithful Catholic and you follow the principles and the values of the Catholic church, you can't be pro-choice. You have to be pro-life," he said.

Flynn, a lifelong Democrat who described himself as pro-life, pro-family and pro-poor, said he doesn't see his group as part of the religious right. In fact, he said, faithful Catholics were not altogether welcome in either party.

Your Catholic Voice sent an e-mail to 170,000 people calling for Catholics to support Pryor, saying he was a "Catholic faithful citizen with a stellar record of public service and competency in the law."

The response they received was "significant," Flynn said, and called their effort "the type of Catholic political activism that is necessary."

Flynn's national field director, Bill May, said Pryor's religion was far from irrelevant.

"Does a conscience guided by faith disqualify him from service on the Court of Appeals?" he asked.

"That's a legitimate question," he said.

The Judiciary Committee's vote on Pryor, which has been delayed four times, now is scheduled for Wednesday. Kuhl and Holmes have both received committee approval, and their nominations await action before the full Senate.

Statement of Dr. Frist on Freeing the Michigan 4 , July 9, 2003

“On Monday I took the rare but not unprecedented step to discharge the Judiciary Committee of the four nominations pending to fill the Michigan seats to the 6th Circuit Court of Appeals that serves the people I represent in Tennessee.

I took that step because the people of the 6th Circuit called upon us to act. I received a remarkable letter from 6th Circuit scholars outlining just how the delay of these nominees is hurting the people of Michigan, Ohio, Kentucky, and Tennessee. Last week, the legislature of Michigan introduced a concurrent resolution asking the Senate to act.

I took that step because the Committee has sought to satisfy the two Michigan senators under its traditional practices, but this has gone on for over one year for all four nominees. All 4 of the vacancies in question have been deemed judicial emergencies by the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts.

The vacancy rate in the Sixth Circuit is 25% even while the Sixth Circuit is the third busiest court of appeals in the country. The Sixth Circuit is eleventh in the timeliness of its disposition of cases. Eleventh. Only one Circuit takes longer to issue its opinions.

I believe it is simply not fair to the individual nominees, to the President, or to the people of the Sixth Circuit to allow this obstruction to abide. And if the Committee will not act on these nominees, then the majority of the Senate will as the Constitution intended.

I should note that Chairman Hatch has the authority to ignore the lack of support by the Michigan senators because the so-called blue slip has never been dispositive when it comes to Circuit nominees. Deference always goes to the president on such nominees. Negative blue slips can always be overcome by a record that the home state senators were consulted. That record exists here, in my view. “

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, this nomination for the Sixth Circuit, and the others that will be made by the majority leader, have not had the benefit of any hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee. I believe that hearing should take place before a lifetime appointment is given to any person to the Circuit Court. So, on behalf of Senators CARL LEVIN and DEBBIE STABENOW of Michigan, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I now send a resolution to discharge from the Judiciary Committee the nomination of Susan Bieke Nielson of Michigan to be a U.S. circuit judge for the Sixth Circuit, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, for the same reasons, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. FRIST. I now send a resolution to discharge from the Judiciary Committee the nomination of Henry W. Saad of Michigan to be a U.S. circuit judge for the Sixth Circuit, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, for the same reasons, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I now send a resolution to discharge from the Judiciary Committee the nomination of Richard Griffin of Michigan to be a U.S. circuit judge for the Sixth Circuit, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DURBIN. For the same reasons, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

The foregoing resolutions will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

The discharge effort is over....it was not expected to be effective. It was used to raise the profile of the nominees and the situation. The next step will be to push for a hearing for the group...letter from Frist to Hatch requesting hearing is expected soon. Thanks.

Opinion Columnist Quin Hillyer

07/16/03

Using pilfered documents, Democrats on the U.S. Senate Judiciary Committee are making a last-minute attempt to derail the nomination of Alabama Attorney General Bill Pryor for a seat on the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Pryor's first problem is that, as an elected official and a participant in the political process, he has helped raise campaign contributions for his political party. How shocking. Next we'll discover that senators, too, raise money.

Pryor's second problem is that he answered a written question too precisely. This was a bad mistake. Faced with an open-ended question, Pryor should have made clear that his answer was not definitive. This he failed to do.

What this all involves is Pryor's role in helping found a group called the Republican Attorneys General Association (RAGA). U.S. Sen. Russ Feingold, D-Wis., the famed campaign finance reformer, asked Pryor at his June 11 committee hearing if a certain scenario, involving a donation to RAGA from a corporation that might one day be investigated by a state attorney general, would present at least the appearance of conflict of interest given your role in RAGA?

Feingold's question was purely hypothetical. Pryor answered that in no instance has he solicited funds from a company under investigation or otherwise failed in ensuring that the law is enforced against any potential contributor.

In a written follow-up, Feingold asked: Are you aware of any companies in the State of Alabama that are or were members of RAGA? Were you involved in the solicitation of any of these companies? If so, which companies?

To be a member of RAGA, as Pryor earlier had explained, required a contribution of at least $5,000. Pryor also had previously explained that at the request of RAGA's staff, he did make some fundraising calls, but that the Republican National Committee kept all records of who donated when -- and that the RNC co-mingled RAGA funds with money for Republican governors and other state officials.

Pryor's answer to Feingold's question about Alabama companies was as follows: I am unaware of any Alabama companies being members of RAGA.

Fast-forward to yesterday. That's when committee staff contacted two former RAGA staffers, Ben Dupuy in Washington, D.C., and Claire Austin in Montgomery. They played phone tag with Austin, but were able to interview Dupuy. He said they asked if Pryor made fundraising calls to companies in Alabama. He said he told them Austin would know, because she was the one who handled fundraising.

Dupuy also said the process was mostly staff-driven. Documents show that RAGA staff had to plead with Republican attorneys general to secure a random hour on their schedules to make such calls. It's not as if every AG kept a record, of who the RAGA members were, in their wallets, Dupuy told me.

What was the point of all this? Apparently, to find some way to read certain documents as if to show that Pryor should have been aware that Alabama companies are RAGA members.

Would Bill Pryor know specifically who were members of RAGA? Claire Austin repeated a question of mine, rhetorically. I kinda doubt it. As a staff person, of course I remember all that stuff. ... That's what I did for a living.

Nevertheless, the committee has documents showing that Bill Pryor did ask some Alabama companies to contribute to RAGA. And some companies with Alabama subsidiaries, such as the Southern Company out of Atlanta (parent to Alabama Power), did become RAGA members.

Austin said the only Southern Company people she remembers attending RAGA events were out of their Washington office.

As for conflicts of interest, Austin said that Bill would not make any calls to the Microsoft people because there was pending litigation nationwide. Pryor was that way about tobacco companies, too. In short, Pryor avoided any potential ethical conflicts that he saw.

Still, a friendly critic could say that Pryor's answer to Feingold wasn't good enough. Yes, he was unaware that any Alabama-based companies were members. (It's still not clear whether any were.) But he perhaps should have said that certainly Alabama companies -- ones not under any investigation -- were asked to join, and that some may well have contributed at or below the membership level. Not, as Jerry Seinfeld would say, that there's anything wrong with that.

By this time, the committee Democrats were searching for a potential reason to assume that Pryor might have known that somewhere along the line there may have been an appearance of a conflict of interest. Obviously, that's about four removes from anything that should rightly disqualify a judicial nominee.

But what led them to this trail of questions is more interesting. Those documents they had -- documents that gave them more information about RAGA than Pryor himself has access to -- came from a former secretary of Claire Austin's by the name of Kelly Foradori. Foradori stopped working for Austin at the end of 1999, after helping with RAGA's first-ever major fundraiser (on Kiawah Island, S.C.).

Austin says she remembers confronting Foradori then to ask if Foradori retained any documents. Turns out, her suspicions were right. Foradori e-mailed those documents to the committee. Most were memos from Austin to various donors. Only a few mention Pryor. But they do show names and affiliations of people who were scheduled to attend some RAGA events.

Foradori's motive in all this is unclear. When reached by cell phone yesterday, before I could even identify myself, she told me: I don't have any comment for you, and please do not call my cell phone again.

What is known is that Foradori was a longtime employee of lobbyist Lanny Young -- and a highly paid one at that, said Austin. Austin briefly had a business with Young, and she said Foradori came with Young (already making what for a clerical employee was a hefty salary) when Austin and Young joined forces.

Lanny Young last month pleaded guilty to bribing Nick Bailey, a top aide to former Alabama Gov. Don Siegelman. Bill Pryor's office is working in conjunction with federal Justice Department officials in the ongoing investigation involving Young, Bailey and others in the Siegelman orbit.

Now Foradori, at least at one time a close associate and employee of Young's, has sent Austin's RAGA documents -- retained against Austin's wishes more than three years ago -- to committee staffers representing U.S. Sen. Ted Kennedy, D-Mass., a leading Pryor opponent.

I think I smell a dirty political payback for an attorney general doing his job, which is prosecuting people for crimes.

But having looked at those documents myself, I see no smoking gun -- nor, for that matter, any gunpowder or bullets or even anything approaching a crime or ethical transgression, that would rightly block Pryor's nomination. Because when it comes to following the law, Bill Pryor is always precise.

Sometimes to his own political detriment.

07/16/03

Using pilfered documents, Democrats on the U.S. Senate Judiciary Committee are making a last-minute attempt to derail the nomination of Alabama Attorney General Bill Pryor for a seat on the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Pryor's first problem is that, as an elected official and a participant in the political process, he has helped raise campaign contributions for his political party. How shocking. Next we'll discover that senators, too, raise money.

Pryor's second problem is that he answered a written question too precisely. This was a bad mistake. Faced with an open-ended question, Pryor should have made clear that his answer was not definitive. This he failed to do.

What this all involves is Pryor's role in helping found a group called the Republican Attorneys General Association (RAGA). U.S. Sen. Russ Feingold, D-Wis., the famed campaign finance reformer, asked Pryor at his June 11 committee hearing if a certain scenario, involving a donation to RAGA from a corporation that might one day be investigated by a state attorney general, would present at least the appearance of conflict of interest given your role in RAGA?

Feingold's question was purely hypothetical. Pryor answered that in no instance has he solicited funds from a company under investigation or otherwise failed in ensuring that the law is enforced against any potential contributor.

In a written follow-up, Feingold asked: Are you aware of any companies in the State of Alabama that are or were members of RAGA? Were you involved in the solicitation of any of these companies? If so, which companies?

To be a member of RAGA, as Pryor earlier had explained, required a contribution of at least $5,000. Pryor also had previously explained that at the request of RAGA's staff, he did make some fundraising calls, but that the Republican National Committee kept all records of who donated when -- and that the RNC co-mingled RAGA funds with money for Republican governors and other state officials.

Pryor's answer to Feingold's question about Alabama companies was as follows: I am unaware of any Alabama companies being members of RAGA.

Fast-forward to yesterday. That's when committee staff contacted two former RAGA staffers, Ben Dupuy in Washington, D.C., and Claire Austin in Montgomery. They played phone tag with Austin, but were able to interview Dupuy. He said they asked if Pryor made fundraising calls to companies in Alabama. He said he told them Austin would know, because she was the one who handled fundraising.

Dupuy also said the process was mostly staff-driven. Documents show that RAGA staff had to plead with Republican attorneys general to secure a random hour on their schedules to make such calls. It's not as if every AG kept a record, of who the RAGA members were, in their wallets, Dupuy told me.

What was the point of all this? Apparently, to find some way to read certain documents as if to show that Pryor should have been aware that Alabama companies are RAGA members.

Would Bill Pryor know specifically who were members of RAGA? Claire Austin repeated a question of mine, rhetorically. I kinda doubt it. As a staff person, of course I remember all that stuff. ... That's what I did for a living.

Nevertheless, the committee has documents showing that Bill Pryor did ask some Alabama companies to contribute to RAGA. And some companies with Alabama subsidiaries, such as the Southern Company out of Atlanta (parent to Alabama Power), did become RAGA members.

Austin said the only Southern Company people she remembers attending RAGA events were out of their Washington office.

As for conflicts of interest, Austin said that Bill would not make any calls to the Microsoft people because there was pending litigation nationwide. Pryor was that way about tobacco companies, too. In short, Pryor avoided any potential ethical conflicts that he saw.

Still, a friendly critic could say that Pryor's answer to Feingold wasn't good enough. Yes, he was unaware that any Alabama-based companies were members. (It's still not clear whether any were.) But he perhaps should have said that certainly Alabama companies -- ones not under any investigation -- were asked to join, and that some may well have contributed at or below the membership level. Not, as Jerry Seinfeld would say, that there's anything wrong with that.

By this time, the committee Democrats were searching for a potential reason to assume that Pryor might have known that somewhere along the line there may have been an appearance of a conflict of interest. Obviously, that's about four removes from anything that should rightly disqualify a judicial nominee.

But what led them to this trail of questions is more interesting. Those documents they had -- documents that gave them more information about RAGA than Pryor himself has access to -- came from a former secretary of Claire Austin's by the name of Kelly Foradori. Foradori stopped working for Austin at the end of 1999, after helping with RAGA's first-ever major fundraiser (on Kiawah Island, S.C.).

Austin says she remembers confronting Foradori then to ask if Foradori retained any documents. Turns out, her suspicions were right. Foradori e-mailed those documents to the committee. Most were memos from Austin to various donors. Only a few mention Pryor. But they do show names and affiliations of people who were scheduled to attend some RAGA events.

Foradori's motive in all this is unclear. When reached by cell phone yesterday, before I could even identify myself, she told me: I don't have any comment for you, and please do not call my cell phone again.

What is known is that Foradori was a longtime employee of lobbyist Lanny Young -- and a highly paid one at that, said Austin. Austin briefly had a business with Young, and she said Foradori came with Young (already making what for a clerical employee was a hefty salary) when Austin and Young joined forces.

Lanny Young last month pleaded guilty to bribing Nick Bailey, a top aide to former Alabama Gov. Don Siegelman. Bill Pryor's office is working in conjunction with federal Justice Department officials in the ongoing investigation involving Young, Bailey and others in the Siegelman orbit.

Now Foradori, at least at one time a close associate and employee of Young's, has sent Austin's RAGA documents -- retained against Austin's wishes more than three years ago -- to committee staffers representing U.S. Sen. Ted Kennedy, D-Mass., a leading Pryor opponent.

I think I smell a dirty political payback for an attorney general doing his job, which is prosecuting people for crimes.

But having looked at those documents myself, I see no smoking gun -- nor, for that matter, any gunpowder or bullets or even anything approaching a crime or ethical transgression, that would rightly block Pryor's nomination. Because when it comes to following the law, Bill Pryor is always precise.

Sometimes to his own political detriment.

From one of the most important small papers in the country. The Manchester Union Leader. This may be the first editorial on judges in that paper and in the State.

Judging judges: Conservatives, Catholics needn't apply

THERE IS an advertisement making the rounds in some states with the headline "Catholics need not apply." It was funded by the Catholic Ave Maria List, and it suggests that U.S. Senate Democrats have set a standard for the federal bench that would forbid Catholics from becoming federal judges. It has struck a chord.

Democratic senators are opposing President Bush's nomination of Alabama Attorney General William Pryor to the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals because of his "deeply held" belief that abortion is wrong.

In opposing Pryor's nomination on the grounds that he believes strongly that abortion is immoral, the Democrats are doing nothing more than playing sleazy partisan politics. The truth is, they will find any reason to oppose any Bush nominee whose appointment they think they can derail. Pryor's stance on abortion happens to be the most expedient excuse to fight his nomination.

But a funny thing happened on the way to the filibuster, which New York Sen. Charles Schumer said this week would occur when Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist calls for a vote of cloture on Pryor's nomination today. Republicans countered that opposing Pryor for his views on abortion means that no one who adheres to Catholic doctrine can become a federal judge.

Democrats have been unable to defend themselves against this charge of anti-Catholic bias. Attempting to defend themselves, they have given further evidence that the charge is true. Sen. Dick Durbin, D-Ill., was quoted in The Hill newspaper yesterday as saying, "Religion is the last refuge of extremists." That fairly well sums up the view of the Senate's leading Democrats.

Senate Republicans, who respect tradition, allowed President Clinton to fill the federal courts with liberal judges. They delayed votes on some nominees, but they never filibustered one. Senate Democrats, who are willing to trample on any tradition if that advances their political agenda, are taking the extraordinary step of filibustering President Bush's judicial nominees only because those nominees are not liberal.

What Senate Democrats are doing to the judicial nominations process is a disgrace to their party and to the country.

More Bad Judges
by JACK NEWFIELD

[from the January 26, 2004 issue]

Here comes the sequel to the Scalia Clones and Thomas Clowns. Karl Rove's White House laboratory has litmus-tested and shipped another batch of extremist nominees to the Senate Judiciary Committee for its members' consent, after not asking for their advice. Hearings are expected to begin soon after Congress reconvenes at the end of January.

These nominees will get the deepest possible scrutiny because of a curiously underreported scandal. In a new excess of zealotry, Republican staffers have stooped to snooping--hacking into the computers of Judiciary Committee Democrats Ted Kennedy and Richard Durbin, stealing fifteen confidential memos and disseminating them to "friendly" media outlets like the Wall Street Journal editorial page and the Washington Times. The e-mails, whose theft became known only when the Journal's editorial page quoted them in November, contained shocking revelations like the fact that Democrats are in touch with the NAACP Legal Defense Fund and People for the American Way.

Judiciary Committee chair Orrin Hatch eventually admitted the hacking. He suspended (with pay) one of his own junior staffers and declared himself "mortified" and "shocked," adding, "There is no excuse that can justify these improper actions." It now appears that Manuel Miranda, a senior aide to Senate majority leader Bill Frist, distributed the e-mails to right-wing lobbying groups and propaganda outfits. Miranda previously worked for the Republicans on the Judiciary Committee and was a public advocate for defeated Bush nominees like Miguel Estrada.

When reached at home, Miranda took the position that "there was no wrongdoing." He added, "The bottom line here is that the technology staff of the Democrats was negligent. They put these memos in a shared hard drive. It was like putting the memos on our desk. The Kennedy and Durbin memos are not Senate business. They are collusive, partisan politics. No Senate rule was violated. There was no hacking, no breaking and entering." Senate Democratic staffers dispute this, saying whoever hacked into their computer files needed a password. The computer invasion is being investigated by Senate sergeant-at-arms William Pickle, who has hired counterespionage expert David Lang.

The combination of more noxious nominations and these dirty tricks has upped the ante in the current judicial filibuster fight, in which the Democrats have so far blocked six Bush nominees. Some evangelical Christian and "family values" pressure groups, plus Senator Trent Lott, are urging Frist to use the "nuclear option" to abolish judicial filibusters. One such option involves having whichever GOP senator is presiding over the Senate at the time rule a filibuster against a nominee out of order and then rule that his position needs only fifty-one votes to be sustained, not the sixty needed to end debate. Some scholars, however, believe the "nuclear option" is unconstitutional and would end up in the courts. Democrats say it will shut down the Senate if used.

Senators Kennedy, Durbin, Charles Schumer, Tom Daschle, Patrick Leahy and their allies began their strategy of filibustering only against what they regarded as "the worst of the worst" Bush nominees in 2002, thinking that what they were attempting was intellectually and morally necessary but that they might pay a price in short-term politics, being seen as obstructionist in the court of public opinion. Now they think they are winning the politics, too. For example, the Washington Post editorial page, which supported Estrada's nomination, has opposed several recent Bush nominees as outside the mainstream. The Republicans are the ones who are coming across as intolerant fanatics. Democrats have used the filibuster only against a half-dozen out of 175 Bush nominees; by comparison, GOP senators blocked more than sixty of Bill Clinton's nominees--most by never giving them a hearing or a vote.

The surprising success of the Democrats' strategy has caused stresses and dissension within the Republican coalition. The religious right and antichoice activists expect Bush and Frist to do more than lose cloture votes and deliver speeches calling liberals names. They want the "nuclear option" exercised. And they are muttering that Hatch and Frist are too liberal and lack the will to fight. But even the most conservative senators know they don't have the votes and that a Senate shutdown could generate a public opinion backlash against them, as the government shutdown did in 1995. In November they were reduced to using the pointless public relations stunt of a forty-hour Senate session that accomplished nothing and ended with the Democrats winning another round of cloture roll calls.

Bush's next wave of unfit nominees is now being vetted by the angry Democratic staff of the Judiciary Committee. Three of the twenty or so are clearly contenders for the "worst of the worst."

Brett Kavanaugh has no judicial experience and, at 38, would be one of the youngest members in the history of the Court of Appeals for the Washington, DC, Circuit--the bench that sent Antonin Scalia and Clarence Thomas directly to the Supreme Court. Kavanaugh is the principal author of Ken Starr's prurient final report to Congress on President Clinton. He drafted the grounds for impeachment and, after leaving the independent counsel's office, went to work at Starr's law firm, Kirkland & Ellis.

Kavanaugh has never participated in a trial. In his Judiciary Committee questionnaire, he was asked to list his ten most significant cases; four of those he cited did not even involve a courtroom appearance, and in two he merely filed a Supreme Court amicus curiae brief for a third party. Most recently, Kavanaugh has worked in the White House selecting Bush's judicial nominees, coordinating the unsuccessful nominations of Estrada and Priscilla Owen.

When he worked for Ken Starr, Kavanaugh spent a lot of his time trying to challenge President Clinton's assertions of executive privilege. But one of his jobs in the Bush White House has been to defend claims of executive privilege. Kavanaugh has blocked a Senate committee from getting to see Enron-related documents, and he wrote the executive order that blocked the release of presidential papers, despite a federal law requiring that they be made public after twelve years.

Meanwhile, a coalition of environmentalists, the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, the Alliance for Justice and the National Congress of American Indians is urging full investigation of alleged ethical improprieties by William Myers before hearings are scheduled for his nomination to the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit. As the solicitor for the Interior Department, Myers has participated in a series of decisions favorable to cattle, mining and timber interests, and damaging to public lands and Native American tribes. Even before he was nominated, environmentalists had filed an ethics complaint against him, accusing him of violating his recusal agreement by meeting with his former lobbying and legal clients. Of all the Bush Cabinet agencies, Interior is probably in the deepest collusion with special interests and campaign donors. But these politicized decisions tend to be administrative regulations so technical, obscure and localized in the West that they don't get on the national radar screen. For example, last March, the Interior Department gave notice that it was proposing weakening grazing regulations adopted by the Clinton Administration and upheld by the Supreme Court. As a lawyer and lobbyist, Myers had been active in challenging these same regulations.

Myers also wrote two separate law review articles defending Judge Robert Bork and attacking the Senate for rejecting Bork's nomination to the Supreme Court.

A third horror in the pipeline is Claude Allen, awaiting renomination to the Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit and now the Deputy Secretary for Health and Human Services. Allen has supported antichoice statutes and regulations; urged sexual abstinence as the solution to AIDS and teen pregnancy; and opposed expanded health insurance for poor children. Allen has been involved in Republican politics for many years. In fact, Allen, who is African-American, was Jesse Helms's press secretary during Helms's racist campaign for re-election in 1984.

Bush is trying to transform America through lifetime judicial appointments for this biased batch and their clones. The bottom line is that the reckless Bushies are willing to violate computer privacy and vandalize the Bill of Rights to expedite this transformation. George W. Bush was appointed President by the Supreme Court after losing the popular vote by more than 500,000. Now he is trying to use the courts to legislate a mandate the voters never gave him by abusing the power of appointment and ignoring the Constitution's "advise and consent" clause.

But having looked at those documents myself, I see no smoking gun -- nor, for that matter, any gunpowder or bullets or even anything approaching a crime or ethical transgression, that would rightly block Pryor's nomination. Because when it comes to following the law, Bill Pryor is always precise.

Sometimes to his own political detriment.

Questions of Faith Raised in Confirmations

Interest Groups Claim Democratic Senators Veto Catholic Nominees
July 21, 2003

By Brent Kendall
Daily Journal Staff Writer

WASHINGTON - The day after Bill Pryor, a nominee for the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, faced questions from Senate Democrats concerned about his views on abortion and the separation of church and state, Senate Judiciary Committee Chairman Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, appeared on television and explained why he asked Pryor a set of questions that he had never posed to any other nominee.

"I got so upset yesterday that I actually did something I've never done before," Hatch told Chris Matthews on MSNBC's political talk show, "Hardball."

"I asked him what his religion was, knowing that he was Catholic. Just so everybody would know that when they were attacking his beliefs, they were attacking his Catholic beliefs," he said.

During Pryor's June 11 nomination hearing, Hatch asked the Alabama attorney general about his religious affiliation (Roman Catholic), whether he was active in his church (yes) and whether he believed in his religion (yes).

Senators on both sides of the aisle objected to Hatch's approach. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., said a nominee's religion "is irrelevant to our consideration," suggesting "just as we're supposed to be colorblind, we should be religious blind."

Arlen Specter, R-Pa., said, "There are enough questions to inquire into and enough substantive matters that [religion] ought to be out of bounds." But Hatch said the questioning was necessary. Pryor had been smeared by interest groups, he said, hit below the belt by some of his opponents' criticisms and attacked for his religious faith.

"In all honesty, I think the Democrats forget there are two clauses in the First Amendment pertaining to religion - the Establishment Clause and the Free Exercise Clause," Hatch told Matthews.

"I think they've forgotten the Free Exercise Clause ... and, you know, it's getting so that a pro-life Catholic can't serve in the federal judiciary." It's a position some conservative advocacy groups and Catholic organizations share. And, galvanized by the Pryor controversy, they are going public with arguments that nominees of strong religious faith cannot pass certain "tests" for approval set forth by Democrats. The Democrats and liberal advocacy groups vigorously deny the charges and call them an attempt to distract attention from their legitimate concerns about contentious Bush nominees.

In addition to Pryor, two other pro-life Catholics are currently mired in the nomination wars: Arkansas District Court nominee James Leon Holmes and Los Angeles County Superior Court Judge Carolyn Kuhl, a nominee for the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Republicans soon may push forward on all three nominees, and some supporters are preparing to use the opportunity to make religion an issue. The Committee for Justice, a group founded by C. Boyden Gray, White House counsel in the first Bush administration, is considering plans to run an ad campaign highlighting Democratic opposition to President Bush's nominees, with the possible theme, "Catholics Need Not Apply."

"Kuhl and Pryor both happen to be Catholic, and there is an argument to be made that with some of the attacks that have been made against them, the Democrats are backing themselves into a quasi-religious test where anybody who holds personal views that are orthodox religious views is automatically considered out of the mainstream and unacceptable for the federal bench," said Sean Rushton, the group's executive director.

"I think that's certainly a button we want to push," he said. "The Democrats may deny it, but actions speak louder than words." Kuhl would not comment, saying, "As a nominee, I've maintained a 'no comment' position throughout, so I'm going to stay with that."

Joe Cella, who heads The Ave Maria List, a Catholic political action committee committed to electing pro-life members of Congress, said his people are working at the grass-roots level to publicize the issue.

Democrats engaged in "hostile questioning" of Pryor, he said.

"Their behavior is a dark example of the new anti-Catholicism, which is sort of the last acceptable prejudice in America."

The charges don't sit well with Catholics on the other side of the political spectrum or with other pro-choice advocates, who say the main issue with Pryor and some other nominees is abortion, not religion.

"What [Democrats] want to do is have nominees that are not going to ditch Roe v. Wade. They don't care whether these people are Catholics or not," said Sister Maureen Fiedler, host of the Washington, D.C.-based public radio series, "Interfaith Voices."

Pryor has called the Roe decision "the worst abomination of the history of constitutional law." Kuhl was involved in an unsuccessful 1985 attempt to have Roe overturned. Holmes, elaborating in 1980 on his abortion views, wrote that rape victims rarely get pregnant. He later apologized. Opponents also have voiced concerns about how committed Holmes and Pryor are to the separation of church and state. Holmes once said that "Christianity, in principle, cannot accept subordination to the political authorities," and Pryor has said that "the challenge of the next millennium will be to preserve the American experiment by restoring its Christian perspective."

Fiedler said the notion that people of strong faith can't sit on the federal bench is "ridiculous on its face."

"It's not their religious views that are doing this but rather the way in which their political views intertwine," she said.

The charges also don't sit well in the office of Leahy, the ranking member of the Senate Judiciary Committee, who is himself a Catholic. Leahy spokesman David Carle said the senator "has always firmly believed and firmly stated that there never should be a religious test for judicial nominees."

"In talks with small groups on the religious right, not intended for general audiences, Senator Hatch for several months has planted seeds alleging a 'religious test,'" Carle said.

But he called the allegation of such a test a "detestable charge" and a "blatant lie that is plainly refuted by the facts themselves." Democrats have confirmed 136 nominees, most of whom "presumably share the administration's right-to-life philosophy, and some of these ... presumably are Christians," Carle said.

As to judges' faiths generally, the Federal Judiciary Center keeps statistics on judges' race, ethnicity and gender but not their religion. "We don't have any complete way of knowing how many Catholics, how many Hindus, how many Protestants, how many agnostics, et cetera, there are," said Dick Carelli, spokesman at the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts.

Leahy's staff was particularly troubled by the July 13 comments of Andrea Lafferty, executive director of the Traditional Family Values Coalition, a pro-life program,

"Washington Journal."

"There's a lot of anti-Christian bigotry coming out of the United States Senate," Lafferty said.

"Senator Leahy has never met a Christian that he likes. He is one of the most anti-Christian members in Congress, and he continues to play that out over and over, particularly with these judicial nominees," Lafferty said.

Leahy was attending Mass at the time the program aired, Carle said.

Frances Kissling, president of Catholics for a Free Choice, said it was "despicable" to suggest that senators' oppositions to certain nominees were related to the nominees' religion, but, she said, such tactics were only marginally effective.

"I think these are fringe campaigns that should not be blown up out of proportion. In the mainstream, nobody pays attention to this. This is go-nowhere stuff," Kissling said.

Nan Aron, president of the liberal advocacy group Alliance for Justice, said the religion issue was "extraneous and irrelevant."

"And it also is an effort of Pryor's supporters and some of the senators to distract attention away from Pryor's dangerous views on so many issues," she said.

Ray Flynn, former mayor of Boston and U.S. ambassador to the Vatican, said he isn't making arguments like those advanced by Lafferty, but he does believe the Catholic issue is a valid one.

Yes, the fight over Pryor and some other judicial nominees is about abortion, but one can't divorce Pryor's views on abortion from his faith, said Flynn, president of the advocacy group Your Catholic Voice.

"The fact is, if you're a faithful Catholic and you follow the principles and the values of the Catholic church, you can't be pro-choice. You have to be pro-life," he said.

Flynn, a lifelong Democrat who described himself as pro-life, pro-family and pro-poor, said he doesn't see his group as part of the religious right. In fact, he said, faithful Catholics were not altogether welcome in either party.

Your Catholic Voice sent an e-mail to 170,000 people calling for Catholics to support Pryor, saying he was a "Catholic faithful citizen with a stellar record of public service and competency in the law."

The response they received was "significant," Flynn said, and called their effort "the type of Catholic political activism that is necessary."

Flynn's national field director, Bill May, said Pryor's religion was far from irrelevant.

"Does a conscience guided by faith disqualify him from service on the Court of Appeals?" he asked.

"That's a legitimate question," he said.

The Judiciary Committee's vote on Pryor, which has been delayed four times, now is scheduled for Wednesday. Kuhl and Holmes have both received committee approval, and their nominations await action before the full Senate.

Opinion Columnist Quin Hillyer

07/16/03

Using pilfered documents, Democrats on the U.S. Senate Judiciary Committee are making a last-minute attempt to derail the nomination of Alabama Attorney General Bill Pryor for a seat on the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Pryor's first problem is that, as an elected official and a participant in the political process, he has helped raise campaign contributions for his political party. How shocking. Next we'll discover that senators, too, raise money.

Pryor's second problem is that he answered a written question too precisely. This was a bad mistake. Faced with an open-ended question, Pryor should have made clear that his answer was not definitive. This he failed to do.

What this all involves is Pryor's role in helping found a group called the Republican Attorneys General Association (RAGA). U.S. Sen. Russ Feingold, D-Wis., the famed campaign finance reformer, asked Pryor at his June 11 committee hearing if a certain scenario, involving a donation to RAGA from a corporation that might one day be investigated by a state attorney general, would present at least the appearance of conflict of interest given your role in RAGA?

Feingold's question was purely hypothetical. Pryor answered that in no instance has he solicited funds from a company under investigation or otherwise failed in ensuring that the law is enforced against any potential contributor.

In a written follow-up, Feingold asked: Are you aware of any companies in the State of Alabama that are or were members of RAGA? Were you involved in the solicitation of any of these companies? If so, which companies?

To be a member of RAGA, as Pryor earlier had explained, required a contribution of at least $5,000. Pryor also had previously explained that at the request of RAGA's staff, he did make some fundraising calls, but that the Republican National Committee kept all records of who donated when -- and that the RNC co-mingled RAGA funds with money for Republican governors and other state officials.

Pryor's answer to Feingold's question about Alabama companies was as follows: I am unaware of any Alabama companies being members of RAGA.

Fast-forward to yesterday. That's when committee staff contacted two former RAGA staffers, Ben Dupuy in Washington, D.C., and Claire Austin in Montgomery. They played phone tag with Austin, but were able to interview Dupuy. He said they asked if Pryor made fundraising calls to companies in Alabama. He said he told them Austin would know, because she was the one who handled fundraising.

Dupuy also said the process was mostly staff-driven. Documents show that RAGA staff had to plead with Republican attorneys general to secure a random hour on their schedules to make such calls. It's not as if every AG kept a record, of who the RAGA members were, in their wallets, Dupuy told me.

What was the point of all this? Apparently, to find some way to read certain documents as if to show that Pryor should have been aware that Alabama companies are RAGA members.

Would Bill Pryor know specifically who were members of RAGA? Claire Austin repeated a question of mine, rhetorically. I kinda doubt it. As a staff person, of course I remember all that stuff. ... That's what I did for a living.

Nevertheless, the committee has documents showing that Bill Pryor did ask some Alabama companies to contribute to RAGA. And some companies with Alabama subsidiaries, such as the Southern Company out of Atlanta (parent to Alabama Power), did become RAGA members.

Austin said the only Southern Company people she remembers attending RAGA events were out of their Washington office.

As for conflicts of interest, Austin said that Bill would not make any calls to the Microsoft people because there was pending litigation nationwide. Pryor was that way about tobacco companies, too. In short, Pryor avoided any potential ethical conflicts that he saw.

Still, a friendly critic could say that Pryor's answer to Feingold wasn't good enough. Yes, he was unaware that any Alabama-based companies were members. (It's still not clear whether any were.) But he perhaps should have said that certainly Alabama companies -- ones not under any investigation -- were asked to join, and that some may well have contributed at or below the membership level. Not, as Jerry Seinfeld would say, that there's anything wrong with that.

By this time, the committee Democrats were searching for a potential reason to assume that Pryor might have known that somewhere along the line there may have been an appearance of a conflict of interest. Obviously, that's about four removes from anything that should rightly disqualify a judicial nominee.

But what led them to this trail of questions is more interesting. Those documents they had -- documents that gave them more information about RAGA than Pryor himself has access to -- came from a former secretary of Claire Austin's by the name of Kelly Foradori. Foradori stopped working for Austin at the end of 1999, after helping with RAGA's first-ever major fundraiser (on Kiawah Island, S.C.).

Austin says she remembers confronting Foradori then to ask if Foradori retained any documents. Turns out, her suspicions were right. Foradori e-mailed those documents to the committee. Most were memos from Austin to various donors. Only a few mention Pryor. But they do show names and affiliations of people who were scheduled to attend some RAGA events.

Foradori's motive in all this is unclear. When reached by cell phone yesterday, before I could even identify myself, she told me: I don't have any comment for you, and please do not call my cell phone again.

What is known is that Foradori was a longtime employee of lobbyist Lanny Young -- and a highly paid one at that, said Austin. Austin briefly had a business with Young, and she said Foradori came with Young (already making what for a clerical employee was a hefty salary) when Austin and Young joined forces.

Lanny Young last month pleaded guilty to bribing Nick Bailey, a top aide to former Alabama Gov. Don Siegelman. Bill Pryor's office is working in conjunction with federal Justice Department officials in the ongoing investigation involving Young, Bailey and others in the Siegelman orbit.

Now Foradori, at least at one time a close associate and employee of Young's, has sent Austin's RAGA documents -- retained against Austin's wishes more than three years ago -- to committee staffers representing U.S. Sen. Ted Kennedy, D-Mass., a leading Pryor opponent.

I think I smell a dirty political payback for an attorney general doing his job, which is prosecuting people for crimes.

But having looked at those documents myself, I see no smoking gun -- nor, for that matter, any gunpowder or bullets or even anything approaching a crime or ethical transgression, that would rightly block Pryor's nomination. Because when it comes to following the law, Bill Pryor is always precise.

Sometimes to his own political detriment.

Using pilfered documents, Democrats on the U.S. Senate Judiciary Committee are making a last-minute attempt to derail the nomination of Alabama Attorney General Bill Pryor for a seat on the 11th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

Pryor's first problem is that, as an elected official and a participant in the political process, he has helped raise campaign contributions for his political party. How shocking. Next we'll discover that senators, too, raise money.

Pryor's second problem is that he answered a written question too precisely. This was a bad mistake. Faced with an open-ended question, Pryor should have made clear that his answer was not definitive. This he failed to do.

What this all involves is Pryor's role in helping found a group called the Republican Attorneys General Association (RAGA). U.S. Sen. Russ Feingold, D-Wis., the famed campaign finance reformer, asked Pryor at his June 11 committee hearing if a certain scenario, involving a donation to RAGA from a corporation that might one day be investigated by a state attorney general, would present at least the appearance of conflict of interest given your role in RAGA?

Feingold's question was purely hypothetical. Pryor answered that in no instance has he solicited funds from a company under investigation or otherwise failed in ensuring that the law is enforced against any potential contributor.

In a written follow-up, Feingold asked: Are you aware of any companies in the State of Alabama that are or were members of RAGA? Were you involved in the solicitation of any of these companies? If so, which companies?

To be a member of RAGA, as Pryor earlier had explained, required a contribution of at least $5,000. Pryor also had previously explained that at the request of RAGA's staff, he did make some fundraising calls, but that the Republican National Committee kept all records of who donated when -- and that the RNC co-mingled RAGA funds with money for Republican governors and other state officials.

Pryor's answer to Feingold's question about Alabama companies was as follows: I am unaware of any Alabama companies being members of RAGA.

Fast-forward to yesterday. That's when committee staff contacted two former RAGA staffers, Ben Dupuy in Washington, D.C., and Claire Austin in Montgomery. They played phone tag with Austin, but were able to interview Dupuy. He said they asked if Pryor made fundraising calls to companies in Alabama. He said he told them Austin would know, because she was the one who handled fundraising.

Dupuy also said the process was mostly staff-driven. Documents show that RAGA staff had to plead with Republican attorneys general to secure a random hour on their schedules to make such calls. It's not as if every AG kept a record, of who the RAGA members were, in their wallets, Dupuy told me.

What was the point of all this? Apparently, to find some way to read certain documents as if to show that Pryor should have been aware that Alabama companies are RAGA members.

Would Bill Pryor know specifically who were members of RAGA? Claire Austin repeated a question of mine, rhetorically. I kinda doubt it. As a staff person, of course I remember all that stuff. ... That's what I did for a living.

Nevertheless, the committee has documents showing that Bill Pryor did ask some Alabama companies to contribute to RAGA. And some companies with Alabama subsidiaries, such as the Southern Company out of Atlanta (parent to Alabama Power), did become RAGA members.

Austin said the only Southern Company people she remembers attending RAGA events were out of their Washington office.

As for conflicts of interest, Austin said that Bill would not make any calls to the Microsoft people because there was pending litigation nationwide. Pryor was that way about tobacco companies, too. In short, Pryor avoided any potential ethical conflicts that he saw.

Still, a friendly critic could say that Pryor's answer to Feingold wasn't good enough. Yes, he was unaware that any Alabama-based companies were members. (It's still not clear whether any were.) But he perhaps should have said that certainly Alabama companies -- ones not under any investigation -- were asked to join, and that some may well have contributed at or below the membership level. Not, as Jerry Seinfeld would say, that there's anything wrong with that.

By this time, the committee Democrats were searching for a potential reason to assume that Pryor might have known that somewhere along the line there may have been an appearance of a conflict of interest. Obviously, that's about four removes from anything that should rightly disqualify a judicial nominee.

But what led them to this trail of questions is more interesting. Those documents they had -- documents that gave them more information about RAGA than Pryor himself has access to -- came from a former secretary of Claire Austin's by the name of Kelly Foradori. Foradori's motive in all this is unclear. When reached by cell phone yesterday, before I could even identify myself, she told me: I don't have any comment for you, and please do not call my cell phone again.

What is known is that Foradori was a longtime employee of lobbyist Lanny Young -- and a highly paid one at that, said Austin. Austin briefly had a business with Young, and she said Foradori came with Young (already making what for a clerical employee was a hefty salary) when Austin and Young joined forces.

Lanny Young last month pleaded guilty to bribing Nick Bailey, a top aide to former Alabama Gov. Don Siegelman. Bill Pryor's office is working in conjunction with federal Justice Department officials in the ongoing investigation involving Young, Bailey and others in the Siegelman orbit.

Now Foradori, at least at one time a close associate and employee of Young's, has sent Austin's RAGA documents -- retained against Austin's wishes more than three years ago -- to committee staffers representing U.S. Sen. Ted Kennedy, D-Mass., a leading Pryor opponent.

I think I smell a dirty political payback for an attorney general doing his job, which is prosecuting people for crimes.

But having looked at those documents myself, I see no smoking gun -- nor, for that matter, any gunpowder or bullets or even anything approaching a crime or ethical transgression, that would rightly block Pryor's nomination. Because when it comes to following the law, Bill Pryor is always precise.

Sometimes to his own political detriment.

Mr. President, reserving the right to object, this nomination for the Sixth Circuit, and the others that will be made by the majority leader, have not had the benefit of any hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

On the Delayed Michigan Nominations to the 6th Circuit Court of Appeal

Wednesday, July 16, 2003

Mr. President, I rise this morning to address the dire situation that exists in the administration of justice for the people of Tennessee, Kentucky, Ohio, and Michigan – the states that make up the 6th Circuit of the United States Court of Appeals.

I am joined here this morning by other Senators from the 6th Circuit and most notably we are joined on the Senate floor by many members of the House of Representatives, representing these four states.

This morning we will be meeting with Michigan's Attorney General Mike Cox and several Michigan leaders who flew down today to make their case that the Senate of the United States should do its job and move forward with the stalled Michigan nominations to the 6th Circuit Court of Appeals. They will be presenting the Senate leadership with a petition of thousands of Michigan citizens asking the Senate to end the delay on the so-called Michigan 4.

This petition corresponds with a concurrent resolution which has been introduced in the Michigan legislature also asking the United States Senate to end the almost two year delay on the Michigan nominations.

The people and leaders of Michigan are not speaking for themselves only. They speak for all the people affected by the delay, and that includes the people of Tennessee, Kentucky, and Ohio.

That is why, Mr. President, last week I took the rare but not unprecedented action to file for the discharge of these four stalled nominations from the Judiciary Committee -- because the delay of these nominations affects more than the state of Michigan, and the entire 6th Circuit Congressional delegation has an interest on behalf of the people of the states and districts we represent.

In response to my discharge motion, my colleague, the senior Senator from Illinois, objected on behalf of the two senators from Michigan, on the basis that the stalled

Michigan nominations had not had a hearing. It was, I thought, an odd objection given that it is the senators from Michigan that are obstructing such hearings from being held.

Nevertheless, I respectfully considered the objection, and studied the record of the Michigan nominations, and this morning I have sent a letter to Chairman Hatch, together with Senator McConnell, asking him to hold hearings on these nominations as soon as possible.

Mr. President, I ask to submit this letter for the record.

I also ask to submit for the historical record, two letters from White House Counsel Alberto Gonzalez, outlining the history of these nominations.

Mr. President, after looking at the record, I have reached the conclusion that the objection to these nominees having hearings is based not on any substantive concerns about their qualifications, integrity, or temperament. Indeed, these four nominees are held in the highest regard and enjoy solid reputations. Nor is it based on a failure of the White House to properly consult with the Michigan senators. In fact, it appears that the Administration has been extremely solicitous of their views, having engaged in extensive and good faith consultation, as that term is properly understood.

Rather, based upon our review of the record of consultation and correspondence, it appears that the Michigan Senators object to consideration of these nominees for purposes unrelated to their personal qualifications. Simply put, they believe that two Clinton nominees from Michigan who were not confirmed should be renominated by President Bush. Because the White House has not taken the extraordinary step of renominating these two Clinton nominees, the Michigan Senators have decided to block all four of Michigan's circuit court nominees (and both of its district court nominees as well).

This is not a valid reason to hold the people of the entire Sixth Circuit hostage and inflict damage and delay on our constituents. This situation is unacceptable and simply cannot continue. The Michigan senators should not be able to prevent the entire Senate from acting on four outstanding nominees who would fill judicial emergencies on an appellate court that is operating with fully one fourth of its seats vacant.

I should note that one of these nominees, Judge Henry Saad, was first nominated by the first President Bush and was never given a hearing. He has been waiting, in effect, for over a decade. It bears noting that when he is confirmed by the Senate, Judge Saad will be the first Arab American to serve on the circuit courts.

Mr. President, the Constitution of the United States requires that the Senate to responsibly and expeditiously vote on the President's nominees – “yea” or “nay” – and allow the courts to get on with their work. Instead, what is happening is that the President's nominees to the Sixth Circuit are being held up and the Senate is blocked from performing its Constitutional duty.

Among the twelve United States Courts of Appeals, the Sixth Circuit is now dead last in the timeliness of its disposition of cases.

District court judges within the Sixth Circuit warn us that by having to perform regular duty as a substitute judge on the court of appeals, their own trial dockets have slowed considerably.

Only a substantial commitment on the part of the senior judges of the Sixth Circuit, district judges from within the Sixth Circuit, and visiting appellate judges from other circuits has kept the caseload even barely manageable. The Sixth Circuit is the third busiest court of appeals, and Chief Judge Boyce Martin has asked Congress to authorize a 17th judge for the court. The court would be overworked even if it had its full complement of 16 judges.

According to district judge Robert Bell (W.D. Michigan), “We’re having to backfill with judges from other circuits, who are basically substitutes. You don’t get the same sense of purpose and continuity you get with full-fledged court of appeals judges.” Furthermore, “we don’t have the time or the resources that the circuit court has. You can’t help to conclude that if we had 16 full-time judges with the full complement of staff, that each case might get more consideration...”

Those are very troubling words: “Each case might get more consideration.” It is unconscionable that we would deliberately allow our courts to get clogged up, backlogged, and undermined because some in the Washington wish to politicize the process. Our courts are supposed to be fair and impartial. They are supposed to serve both victims and defendants. We are undermining the rights of our fellow citizens if we do not resolve this issue.

And it's not just judges who are seeing what's happening. United States attorneys in Michigan tell us that the delays caused by the vacancies are complicating their ability to prosecute wrongdoers, defendants are able to commit more crime while awaiting trial, there is less consistency in the court's jurisprudence, and the United States is effectively being deprived of en banc review in some cases.

In a letter signed by 31 Assistant United States Attorneys in the Eastern District of Michigan states that, "[i]n years past, it was the normal practice of the Sixth Circuit that a case would be heard by the Court approximately three months after all briefs were filed, and in most cases an opinion would issue in about three additional months. At present, due to the large number of vacancies on the Court... it has been taking on average between twelve and eighteen months longer for most appeals to be completed..."

Moreover, they go on, "[D]elays in criminal cases hurt the government...[T]he longer a case goes on, the more chance there is that witnesses will disappear, forget, or die, documents will be lost, and investigators will retire or be transferred...In some cases, convicted criminal defendants are granted bond pending appeal. The elongated appellate process therefore allows defendants to remain on the street for a longer period of time, possibly committing new offenses. In addition, the longer delay makes retrials more difficult if the appeal results in the reversal of a conviction.

They go on: "[T]he Sixth Circuit has resorted to having more district judges sit by designation as panel members. This practice has contributed to a slowdown of the hearing of cases in the district courts, because the district judges are taken out of those courtrooms. The widespread use of district judges also provides for less consistency in the appellate process than would obtain if full-time Circuit Judges heard most of the appeals."

And they conclude: "In some cases, the small number of judges on the Court has served to effectively deprive the United States of en banc review... Achieving a unanimous vote of all of those judges of the Court who were not part of the original panel is, as a matter of practice, impossible, and not worth seeking. However, if the Court was at full strength, an en banc review could have been granted with the votes of about two thirds of the active judges who were not part of the original panel."

I quote their comments at length, because I want to lay out in unambiguous terms what is happening to our justice system.

Justice delayed is justice denied – justice denied to everyone, including victims, defendants, and the entire community.

President Bush has nominated 4 well-qualified individuals from Michigan to fill these vacancies.

The objections of the Michigan Senators are, in my view, unreasonable.

The basis of their complaint is that two nominees were left without hearings at the end of President Clinton's term in 2001.

They ignore the fact that two nominees were also left without hearings at the end of President Bush's term in 1993, which means that President Clinton got to appoint the same number of judges to the Sixth Circuit as the number of vacancies that came open during his presidency.

Both parties have left nominations pending at the end of Presidents' terms. But the effort by my Michigan colleagues to block nominations at the outset of a President's term is unheard of.

Five of the Sixth Circuit's active judges— nearly half —were appointed by President Clinton.

Let me read from the Grand Rapids Press. It makes the point well, saying, "The Constitution does not give [Sens. Levin and Stabenow] co-presidential authority and certainly does not support the use of the Court of Appeals to nurse a political grudge [Sens. Levin and Stabenow] have proposed that the president let a bipartisan commission make Sixth Circuit nominations or that Mr. Bush re-nominate the two lapsed Clinton nominations. Mr. Bush has shown no interest in either retreat from his constitutional prerogatives. Nor should he. Movement in this matter should come from Sens. Levin and Stabenow—and, clearly, it should be backward."

Mr. President, our courts can't work if we don't have judges to run them. And our communities suffer when our courts don't work -- victims, who never see justice, defendants who hang in limbo. And communities that go unprotected.

President Bush's judicial nominees deserve a simple up or down vote. That is all that is being asked. That is one of our most important Constitutional duties. We cannot use the system to nurse grudges. The consequences are too great. The public expects us to get do our duty. I call upon my fellow senators to exercise their Constitutional responsibilities and free the Michigan four.

I yield the floor.

Mr. President, I ask to submit this letter for the record.

I also ask to submit for the historical record, two letters from White House Counsel Alberto Gonzalez, outlining the history of these nominations.

Mr. President, after looking at the record, I have reached the conclusion that the objection to these nominees having hearings is based not on any substantive concerns about their qualifications, integrity, or temperament. Indeed, these four nominees are held in the highest regard and enjoy solid reputations. Nor is it based on a failure of the White House to properly consult with the Michigan senators. In fact, it appears that the Administration has been extremely solicitous of their views, having engaged in extensive and good faith consultation, as that term is properly understood.

Rather, based upon our review of the record of consultation and correspondence, it appears that the Michigan Senators object to consideration of these nominees for purposes unrelated to their personal qualifications. Simply put, they believe that two Clinton nominees from Michigan who were not confirmed should be renominated by President Bush. Because the White House has not taken the extraordinary step of renominating these two Clinton nominees, the Michigan Senators have decided to block all four of Michigan's circuit court nominees (and both of its district court nominees as well).

This is not a valid reason to hold the people of the entire Sixth Circuit hostage and inflict damage and delay on our constituents. This situation is unacceptable and simply cannot continue. The Michigan senators should not be able to prevent the entire Senate from acting on four outstanding nominees who would fill judicial emergencies on an appellate court that is operating with fully one fourth of its seats vacant.

I should note that one of these nominees, Judge Henry Saad, was first nominated by the first President Bush and was never given a hearing. He has been waiting, in effect, for over a decade. It bears noting that when he is confirmed by the Senate, Judge Saad will be the first Arab American to serve on the circuit courts.

Mr. President, the Constitution of the United States requires that the Senate to responsibly and expeditiously vote on the President's nominees – “yea” or “nay” – and allow the courts to get on with their work. Instead, what is happening is that the President's nominees to the Sixth Circuit are being held up and the Senate is blocked from performing its Constitutional duty.

Among the twelve United States Courts of Appeals, the Sixth Circuit is now dead last in the timeliness of its disposition of cases.

District court judges within the Sixth Circuit warn us that by having to perform regular duty as a substitute judge on the court of appeals, their own trial dockets have slowed considerably.

Only a substantial commitment on the part of the senior judges of the Sixth Circuit, district judges from within the Sixth Circuit, and visiting appellate judges from other circuits has kept the caseload even barely manageable. The Sixth Circuit is the third busiest court of appeals, and Chief Judge Boyce Martin has asked Congress to authorize a 17th judge for the court. The court would be overworked even if it had its full complement of 16 judges.

According to district judge Robert Bell (W.D. Michigan), “We’re having to backfill with judges from other circuits, who are basically substitutes. You don’t get the same sense of purpose and continuity you get with full-fledged court of appeals judges.” Furthermore, “we don’t have the time or the resources that the circuit court has. You can’t help to conclude that if we had 16 full-time judges with the full complement of staff, that each case might get more consideration...”

Those are very troubling words: “Each case might get more consideration.” It is unconscionable that we would deliberately allow our courts to get clogged up, backlogged, and undermined because some in the Washington wish to politicize the process. Our courts are supposed to be fair and impartial. They are supposed to serve both victims and defendants. We are undermining the rights of our fellow citizens if we do not resolve this issue.

And it's not just judges who are seeing what's happening. United States attorneys in Michigan tell us that the delays caused by the vacancies are complicating their ability to prosecute wrongdoers, defendants are able to commit more crime while awaiting trial, there is less consistency in the court's jurisprudence, and the United States is effectively being deprived of en banc review in some cases.

In a letter signed by 31 Assistant United States Attorneys in the Eastern District of Michigan states that, "[i]n years past, it was the normal practice of the Sixth Circuit that a case would be heard by the Court approximately three months after all briefs were filed, and in most cases an opinion would issue in about three additional months. At present, due to the large number of vacancies on the Court... it has been taking on average between twelve and eighteen months longer for most appeals to be completed..."

Moreover, they go on, "[D]elays in criminal cases hurt the government...[T]he longer a case goes on, the more chance there is that witnesses will disappear, forget, or die, documents will be lost, and investigators will retire or be transferred...In some cases, convicted criminal defendants are granted bond pending appeal. The elongated appellate process therefore allows defendants to remain on the street for a longer period of time, possibly committing new offenses. In addition, the longer delay makes retrials more difficult if the appeal results in the reversal of a conviction.

They go on: "[T]he Sixth Circuit has resorted to having more district judges sit by designation as panel members. This practice has contributed to a slowdown of the hearing of cases in the district courts, because the district judges are taken out of those courtrooms. The widespread use of district judges also provides for less consistency in the appellate process than would obtain if full-time Circuit Judges heard most of the appeals."

And they conclude: "In some cases, the small number of judges on the Court has served to effectively deprive the United States of en banc review... Achieving a unanimous vote of all of those judges of the Court who were not part of the original panel is, as a matter of practice, impossible, and not worth seeking. However, if the Court was at full strength, an en banc review could have been granted with the votes of about two thirds of the active judges who were not part of the original panel."

I quote their comments at length, because I want to lay out in unambiguous terms what is happening to our justice system.

Justice delayed is justice denied – justice denied to everyone, including victims, defendants, and the entire community.

President Bush has nominated 4 well-qualified individuals from Michigan to fill these vacancies.

The objections of the Michigan Senators are, in my view, unreasonable.

The basis of their complaint is that two nominees were left without hearings at the end of President Clinton's term in 2001.

They ignore the fact that two nominees were also left without hearings at the end of President Bush's term in 1993, which means that President Clinton got to appoint the same number of judges to the Sixth Circuit as the number of vacancies that came open during his presidency.

Both parties have left nominations pending at the end of Presidents' terms. But the effort by my Michigan colleagues to block nominations at the outset of a President's term is unheard of.

Five of the Sixth Circuit's active judges— nearly half —were appointed by President Clinton.

Let me read from the Grand Rapids Press. It makes the point well, saying, "The Constitution does not give [Sens. Levin and Stabenow] co-presidential authority and certainly does not support the use of the Court of Appeals to nurse a political grudge [Sens. Levin and Stabenow] have proposed that the president let a bipartisan commission make Sixth Circuit nominations or that Mr. Bush re-nominate the two lapsed Clinton nominations. Mr. Bush has shown no interest in either retreat from his constitutional prerogatives. Nor should he. Movement in this matter should come from Sens. Levin and Stabenow—and, clearly, it should be backward."

Mr. President, our courts can't work if we don't have judges to run them. And our communities suffer when our courts don't work -- victims, who never see justice, defendants who hang in limbo. And communities that go unprotected.

President Bush's judicial nominees deserve a simple up or down vote. That is all that is being asked. That is one of our most important Constitutional duties. We cannot use the system to nurse grudges. The consequences are too great. The public expects us to get do our duty. I call upon my fellow senators to exercise their Constitutional responsibilities and free the Michigan four.

I yield the floor.

On the Delayed Michigan Nominations to the 6th Circuit Court of Appeal

Wednesday, July 16, 2003

Mr. President, I rise this morning to address the dire situation that exists in the administration of justice for the people of Tennessee, Kentucky, Ohio, and Michigan – the states that make up the 6th Circuit of the United States Court of Appeals.

I am joined here this morning by other Senators from the 6th Circuit and most notably we are joined on the Senate floor by many members of the House of Representatives, representing these four states.

This morning we will be meeting with Michigan's Attorney General Mike Cox and several Michigan leaders who flew down today to make their case that the Senate of the United States should do its job and move forward with the stalled Michigan nominations to the 6th Circuit Court of Appeals. They will be presenting the Senate leadership with a petition of thousands of Michigan citizens asking the Senate to end the delay on the so-called Michigan 4.

This petition corresponds with a concurrent resolution which has been introduced in the Michigan legislature also asking the United States Senate to end the almost two year delay on the Michigan nominations.

The people and leaders of Michigan are not speaking for themselves only. They speak for all the people affected by the delay, and that includes the people of Tennessee, Kentucky, and Ohio.

That is why, Mr. President, last week I took the rare but not unprecedented action to file for the discharge of these four stalled nominations from the Judiciary Committee -- because the delay of these nominations affects more than the state of Michigan, and the entire 6th Circuit Congressional delegation has an interest on behalf of the people of the states and districts we represent.

In response to my discharge motion, my colleague, the senior Senator from Illinois, objected on behalf of the two senators from Michigan, on the basis that the stalled

Michigan nominations had not had a hearing. It was, I thought, an odd objection given that it is the senators from Michigan that are obstructing such hearings from being held.

Nevertheless, I respectfully considered the objection, and studied the record of the Michigan nominations, and this morning I have sent a letter to Chairman Hatch, together with Senator McConnell, asking him to hold hearings on these nominations as soon as possible.

Mr. President, I ask to submit this letter for the record.

I also ask to submit for the historical record, two letters from White House Counsel Alberto Gonzalez, outlining the history of these nominations.

On the Delayed Michigan Nominations to the 6th Circuit Court of Appeal

Wednesday, July 16, 2003

Mr. President, I rise this morning to address the dire situation that exists in the administration of justice for the people of Tennessee, Kentucky, Ohio, and Michigan – the states that make up the 6th Circuit of the United States Court of Appeals.

I am joined here this morning by other Senators from the 6th Circuit and most notably we are joined on the Senate floor by many members of the House of Representatives, representing these four states.

This morning we will be meeting with Michigan's Attorney General Mike Cox and several Michigan leaders who flew down today to make their case that the Senate of the United States should do its job and move forward with the stalled Michigan nominations to the 6th Circuit Court of Appeals. They will be presenting the Senate leadership with a petition of thousands of Michigan citizens asking the Senate to end the delay on the so-called Michigan 4.

This petition corresponds with a concurrent resolution which has been introduced in the Michigan legislature also asking the United States Senate to end the almost two year delay on the Michigan nominations.

The people and leaders of Michigan are not speaking for themselves only. They speak for all the people affected by the delay, and that includes the people of Tennessee, Kentucky, and Ohio.

That is why, Mr. President, last week I took the rare but not unprecedented action to file for the discharge of these four stalled nominations from the Judiciary Committee -- because the delay of these nominations affects more than the state of Michigan, and the entire 6th Circuit Congressional delegation has an interest on behalf of the people of the states and districts we represent.

In response to my discharge motion, my colleague, the senior Senator from Illinois, objected on behalf of the two senators from Michigan, on the basis that the stalled

Michigan nominations had not had a hearing. It was, I thought, an odd objection given that it is the senators from Michigan that are obstructing such hearings from being held.

Nevertheless, I respectfully considered the objection, and studied the record of the Michigan nominations, and this morning I have sent a letter to Chairman Hatch, together with Senator McConnell, asking him to hold hearings on these nominations as soon as possible.

Mr. President, I ask to submit this letter for the record.

I also ask to submit for the historical record, two letters from White House Counsel Alberto Gonzalez, outlining the history of these nominations.

Mr. President, after looking at the record, I have reached the conclusion that the objection to these nominees having hearings is based not on any substantive concerns about their qualifications, integrity, or temperament. Indeed, these four nominees are held in the highest regard and enjoy solid reputations. Nor is it based on a failure of the White House to properly consult with the Michigan senators. In fact, it appears that the Administration has been extremely solicitous of their views, having engaged in extensive and good faith consultation, as that term is properly understood.

Rather, based upon our review of the record of consultation and correspondence, it appears that the Michigan Senators object to consideration of these nominees for purposes unrelated to their personal qualifications. Simply put, they believe that two Clinton nominees from Michigan who were not confirmed should be renominated by President Bush. Because the White House has not taken the extraordinary step of renominating these two Clinton nominees, the Michigan Senators have decided to block all four of Michigan's circuit court nominees (and both of its district court nominees as well).

This is not a valid reason to hold the people of the entire Sixth Circuit hostage and inflict damage and delay on our constituents. This situation is unacceptable and simply cannot continue. The Michigan senators should not be able to prevent the entire Senate from acting on four outstanding nominees who would fill judicial emergencies on an appellate court that is operating with fully one fourth of its seats vacant.

I should note that one of these nominees, Judge Henry Saad, was first nominated by the first President Bush and was never given a hearing. He has been waiting, in effect, for over a decade. It bears noting that when he is confirmed by the Senate, Judge Saad will be the first Arab American to serve on the circuit courts.

Mr. President, the Constitution of the United States requires that the Senate to responsibly and expeditiously vote on the President's nominees – “yea” or “nay” – and allow the courts to get on with their work. Instead, what is happening is that the President's nominees to the Sixth Circuit are being held up and the Senate is blocked from performing its Constitutional duty.

Among the twelve United States Courts of Appeals, the Sixth Circuit is now dead last in the timeliness of its disposition of cases.

District court judges within the Sixth Circuit warn us that by having to perform regular duty as a substitute judge on the court of appeals, their own trial dockets have slowed considerably.

Only a substantial commitment on the part of the senior judges of the Sixth Circuit, district judges from within the Sixth Circuit, and visiting appellate judges from other circuits has kept the caseload even barely manageable. The Sixth Circuit is the third busiest court of appeals, and Chief Judge Boyce Martin has asked Congress to authorize a 17th judge for the court. The court would be overworked even if it had its full complement of 16 judges.

According to district judge Robert Bell (W.D. Michigan), “We’re having to backfill with judges from other circuits, who are basically substitutes. You don’t get the same sense of purpose and continuity you get with full-fledged court of appeals judges.” Furthermore, “we don’t have the time or the resources that the circuit court has. You can’t help to conclude that if we had 16 full-time judges with the full complement of staff, that each case might get more consideration...”

Those are very troubling words: “Each case might get more consideration.” It is unconscionable that we would deliberately allow our courts to get clogged up, backlogged, and undermined because some in the Washington wish to politicize the process. Our courts are supposed to be fair and impartial. They are supposed to serve both victims and defendants. We are undermining the rights of our fellow citizens if we do not resolve this issue.

And it's not just judges who are seeing what's happening. United States attorneys in Michigan tell us that the delays caused by the vacancies are complicating their ability to prosecute wrongdoers, defendants are able to commit more crime while awaiting trial, there is less consistency in the court's jurisprudence, and the United States is effectively being deprived of en banc review in some cases.

In a letter signed by 31 Assistant United States Attorneys in the Eastern District of Michigan states that, "[i]n years past, it was the normal practice of the Sixth Circuit that a case would be heard by the Court approximately three months after all briefs were filed, and in most cases an opinion would issue in about three additional months. At present, due to the large number of vacancies on the Court... it has been taking on average between twelve and eighteen months longer for most appeals to be completed..."

Moreover, they go on, "[D]elays in criminal cases hurt the government...[T]he longer a case goes on, the more chance there is that witnesses will disappear, forget, or die, documents will be lost, and investigators will retire or be transferred...In some cases, convicted criminal defendants are granted bond pending appeal. The elongated appellate process therefore allows defendants to remain on the street for a longer period of time, possibly committing new offenses. In addition, the longer delay makes retrials more difficult if the appeal results in the reversal of a conviction.

They go on: "[T]he Sixth Circuit has resorted to having more district judges sit by designation as panel members. This practice has contributed to a slowdown of the hearing of cases in the district courts, because the district judges are taken out of those courtrooms. The widespread use of district judges also provides for less consistency in the appellate process than would obtain if full-time Circuit Judges heard most of the appeals."

And they conclude: "In some cases, the small number of judges on the Court has served to effectively deprive the United States of en banc review... Achieving a unanimous vote of all of those judges of the Court who were not part of the original panel is, as a matter of practice, impossible, and not worth seeking. However, if the Court was at full strength, an en banc review could have been granted with the votes of about two thirds of the active judges who were not part of the original panel."

I quote their comments at length, because I want to lay out in unambiguous terms what is happening to our justice system.

Justice delayed is justice denied – justice denied to everyone, including victims, defendants, and the entire community.

President Bush has nominated 4 well-qualified individuals from Michigan to fill these vacancies.

The objections of the Michigan Senators are, in my view, unreasonable.

The basis of their complaint is that two nominees were left without hearings at the end of President Clinton's term in 2001.

They ignore the fact that two nominees were also left without hearings at the end of President Bush's term in 1993, which means that President Clinton got to appoint the same number of judges to the Sixth Circuit as the number of vacancies that came open during his presidency.

Both parties have left nominations pending at the end of Presidents' terms. But the effort by my Michigan colleagues to block nominations at the outset of a President's term is unheard of.

Five of the Sixth Circuit's active judges— nearly half —were appointed by President Clinton.

Let me read from the Grand Rapids Press. It makes the point well, saying, "The Constitution does not give [Sens. Levin and Stabenow] co-presidential authority and certainly does not support the use of the Court of Appeals to nurse a political grudge [Sens. Levin and Stabenow] have proposed that the president let a bipartisan commission make Sixth Circuit nominations or that Mr. Bush re-nominate the two lapsed Clinton nominations. Mr. Bush has shown no interest in either retreat from his constitutional prerogatives. Nor should he. Movement in this matter should come from Sens. Levin and Stabenow—and, clearly, it should be backward."

Mr. President, our courts can't work if we don't have judges to run them. And our communities suffer when our courts don't work -- victims, who never see justice, defendants who hang in limbo. And communities that go unprotected.

President Bush's judicial nominees deserve a simple up or down vote. That is all that is being asked. That is one of our most important Constitutional duties. We cannot use the system to nurse grudges. The consequences are too great. The public expects us to get do our duty. I call upon my fellow senators to exercise their Constitutional responsibilities and free the Michigan four.

I yield the floor.

Five of the Sixth Circuit's active judges— nearly half —were appointed by President Clinton.

Let me read from the Grand Rapids Press. It makes the point well, saying, "The Constitution does not give [Sens. Levin and Stabenow] co-presidential authority and certainly does not support the use of the Court of Appeals to nurse a political grudge [Sens. Levin and Stabenow] have proposed that the president let a bipartisan commission make Sixth Circuit nominations or that Mr. Bush re-nominate the two lapsed Clinton nominations. Mr. Bush has shown no interest in either retreat from his constitutional prerogatives. Nor should he. Movement in this matter should come from Sens. Levin and Stabenow—and, clearly, it should be backward."

Mr. President, our courts can't work if we don't have judges to run them. And our communities suffer when our courts don't work -- victims, who never see justice, defendants who hang in limbo. And communities that go unprotected.

President Bush's judicial nominees deserve a simple up or down vote. That is all that is being asked. That is one of our most important Constitutional duties. We cannot use the system to nurse grudges. The consequences are too great. The public expects us to get do our duty. I call upon my fellow senators to exercise their Constitutional responsibilities and free the Michigan four.

I yield the floor.

On the Delayed Michigan Nominations to the 6th Circuit Court of Appeal

Wednesday, July 16, 2003

Mr. President, I rise this morning to address the dire situation that exists in the administration of justice for the people of Tennessee, Kentucky, Ohio, and Michigan – the states that make up the 6th Circuit of the United States Court of Appeals.

I am joined here this morning by other Senators from the 6th Circuit and most notably we are joined on the Senate floor by many members of the House of Representatives, representing these four states.

This morning we will be meeting with Michigan's Attorney General Mike Cox and several Michigan leaders who flew down today to make their case that the Senate of the United States should do its job and move forward with the stalled Michigan nominations to the 6th Circuit Court of Appeals. They will be presenting the Senate leadership with a petition of thousands of Michigan citizens asking the Senate to end the delay on the so-called Michigan 4.

This petition corresponds with a concurrent resolution which has been introduced in the Michigan legislature also asking the United States Senate to end the almost two year delay on the Michigan nominations.

The people and leaders of Michigan are not speaking for themselves only. They speak for all the people affected by the delay, and that includes the people of Tennessee, Kentucky, and Ohio.

That is why, Mr. President, last week I took the rare but not unprecedented action to file for the discharge of these four stalled nominations from the Judiciary Committee -- because the delay of these nominations affects more than the state of Michigan, and the entire 6th Circuit Congressional delegation has an interest on behalf of the people of the states and districts we represent.

In response to my discharge motion, my colleague, the senior Senator from Illinois, objected on behalf of the two senators from Michigan, on the basis that the stalled

Michigan nominations had not had a hearing. It was, I thought, an odd objection given that it is the senators from Michigan that are obstructing such hearings from being held.

Nevertheless, I respectfully considered the objection, and studied the record of the Michigan nominations, and this morning I have sent a letter to Chairman Hatch, together with Senator McConnell, asking him to hold hearings on these nominations as soon as possible.

Mr. President, I ask to submit this letter for the record.

I also ask to submit for the historical record, two letters from White House Counsel Alberto Gonzalez, outlining the history of these nominations.

Mr. President, after looking at the record, I have reached the conclusion that the objection to these nominees having hearings is based not on any substantive concerns about their qualifications, integrity, or temperament. Indeed, these four nominees are held in the highest regard and enjoy solid reputations. Nor is it based on a failure of the White House to properly consult with the Michigan senators. In fact, it appears that the Administration has been extremely solicitous of their views, having engaged in extensive and good faith consultation, as that term is properly understood.

Rather, based upon our review of the record of consultation and correspondence, it appears that the Michigan Senators object to consideration of these nominees for purposes unrelated to their personal qualifications. Simply put, they believe that two Clinton nominees from Michigan who were not confirmed should be renominated by President Bush. Because the White House has not taken the extraordinary step of renominating these two Clinton nominees, the Michigan Senators have decided to block all four of Michigan's circuit court nominees (and both of its district court nominees as well).

This is not a valid reason to hold the people of the entire Sixth Circuit hostage and inflict damage and delay on our constituents. This situation is unacceptable and simply cannot continue. The Michigan senators should not be able to prevent the entire Senate from acting on four outstanding nominees who would fill judicial emergencies on an appellate court that is operating with fully one fourth of its seats vacant.

I should note that one of these nominees, Judge Henry Saad, was first nominated by the first President Bush and was never given a hearing. He has been waiting, in effect, for over a decade. It bears noting that when he is confirmed by the Senate, Judge Saad will be the first Arab American to serve on the circuit courts.

Mr. President, the Constitution of the United States requires that the Senate to responsibly and expeditiously vote on the President's nominees – “yea” or “nay” – and allow the courts to get on with their work. Instead, what is happening is that the President's nominees to the Sixth Circuit are being held up and the Senate is blocked from performing its Constitutional duty.

Among the twelve United States Courts of Appeals, the Sixth Circuit is now dead last in the timeliness of its disposition of cases.

District court judges within the Sixth Circuit warn us that by having to perform regular duty as a substitute judge on the court of appeals, their own trial dockets have slowed considerably.

Only a substantial commitment on the part of the senior judges of the Sixth Circuit, district judges from within the Sixth Circuit, and visiting appellate judges from other circuits has kept the caseload even barely manageable. The Sixth Circuit is the third busiest court of appeals, and Chief Judge Boyce Martin has asked Congress to authorize a 17th judge for the court. The court would be overworked even if it had its full complement of 16 judges.

According to district judge Robert Bell (W.D. Michigan), “We’re having to backfill with judges from other circuits, who are basically substitutes. You don’t get the same sense of purpose and continuity you get with full-fledged court of appeals judges.” Furthermore, “we don’t have the time or the resources that the circuit court has. You can’t help to conclude that if we had 16 full-time judges with the full complement of staff, that each case might get more consideration...”

Those are very troubling words: “Each case might get more consideration.” It is unconscionable that we would deliberately allow our courts to get clogged up, backlogged, and undermined because some in the Washington wish to politicize the process. Our courts are supposed to be fair and impartial. They are supposed to serve both victims and defendants. We are undermining the rights of our fellow citizens if we do not resolve this issue.

And it's not just judges who are seeing what's happening. United States attorneys in Michigan tell us that the delays caused by the vacancies are complicating their ability to prosecute wrongdoers, defendants are able to commit more crime while awaiting trial, there is less consistency in the court's jurisprudence, and the United States is effectively being deprived of en banc review in some cases.

In a letter signed by 31 Assistant United States Attorneys in the Eastern District of Michigan states that, "[i]n years past, it was the normal practice of the Sixth Circuit that a case would be heard by the Court approximately three months after all briefs were filed, and in most cases an opinion would issue in about three additional months. At present, due to the large number of vacancies on the Court... it has been taking on average between twelve and eighteen months longer for most appeals to be completed..."

Moreover, they go on, "[D]elays in criminal cases hurt the government...[T]he longer a case goes on, the more chance there is that witnesses will disappear, forget, or die, documents will be lost, and investigators will retire or be transferred...In some cases, convicted criminal defendants are granted bond pending appeal. The elongated appellate process therefore allows defendants to remain on the street for a longer period of time, possibly committing new offenses. In addition, the longer delay makes retrials more difficult if the appeal results in the reversal of a conviction.

They go on: "[T]he Sixth Circuit has resorted to having more district judges sit by designation as panel members. This practice has contributed to a slowdown of the hearing of cases in the district courts, because the district judges are taken out of those courtrooms. The widespread use of district judges also provides for less consistency in the appellate process than would obtain if full-time Circuit Judges heard most of the appeals."

And they conclude: "In some cases, the small number of judges on the Court has served to effectively deprive the United States of en banc review... Achieving a unanimous vote of all of those judges of the Court who were not part of the original panel is, as a matter of practice, impossible, and not worth seeking. However, if the Court was at full strength, an en banc review could have been granted with the votes of about two thirds of the active judges who were not part of the original panel."

I quote their comments at length, because I want to lay out in unambiguous terms what is happening to our justice system.

Justice delayed is justice denied – justice denied to everyone, including victims, defendants, and the entire community.

President Bush has nominated 4 well-qualified individuals from Michigan to fill these vacancies.

The objections of the Michigan Senators are, in my view, unreasonable.

The basis of their complaint is that two nominees were left without hearings at the end of President Clinton's term in 2001.

They ignore the fact that two nominees were also left without hearings at the end of President Bush's term in 1993, which means that President Clinton got to appoint the same number of judges to the Sixth Circuit as the number of vacancies that came open during his presidency.

Both parties have left nominations pending at the end of Presidents' terms. But the effort by my Michigan colleagues to block nominations at the outset of a President's term is unheard of.

Five of the Sixth Circuit's active judges— nearly half —were appointed by President Clinton.

Let me read from the Grand Rapids Press. It makes the point well, saying, "The Constitution does not give [Sens. Levin and Stabenow] co-presidential authority and certainly does not support the use of the Court of Appeals to nurse a political grudge [Sens. And it's not just judges who are seeing what's happening. United States attorneys in Michigan tell us that the delays caused by the vacancies are complicating their ability to prosecute wrongdoers, defendants are able to commit more crime while awaiting trial, there is less consistency in the court's jurisprudence, and the United States is effectively being deprived of en banc review in some cases.

In a letter signed by 31 Assistant United States Attorneys in the Eastern District of Michigan states that, "[i]n years past, it was the normal practice of the Sixth Circuit that a case would be heard by the Court approximately three months after all briefs were filed, and in most cases an opinion would issue in about three additional months. At present, due to the large number of vacancies on the Court... it has been taking on average between twelve and eighteen months longer for most appeals to be completed..."

Moreover, they go on, "[D]elays in criminal cases hurt the government...[T]he longer a case goes on, the more chance there is that witnesses will disappear, forget, or die, documents will be lost, and investigators will retire or be transferred...In some cases, convicted criminal defendants are granted bond pending appeal. The elongated appellate process therefore allows defendants to remain on the street for a longer period of time, possibly committing new offenses. In addition, the longer delay makes retrials more difficult if the appeal results in the reversal of a conviction.

They go on: "[T]he Sixth Circuit has resorted to having more district judges sit by designation as panel members. This practice has contributed to a slowdown of the hearing of cases in the district courts, because the district judges are taken out of those courtrooms. The widespread use of district judges also provides for less consistency in the appellate process than would obtain if full-time Circuit Judges heard most of the appeals."

And they conclude: "In some cases, the small number of judges on the Court has served to effectively deprive the United States of en banc review... Achieving a unanimous vote of all of those judges of the Court who were not part of the original panel is, as a matter of practice, impossible, and not worth seeking. However, if the Court was at full strength, an en banc review could have been granted with the votes of about two thirds of the active judges who were not part of the original panel."

I quote their comments at length, because I want to lay out in unambiguous terms what is happening to our justice system.

Justice delayed is justice denied – justice denied to everyone, including victims, defendants, and the entire community.

President Bush has nominated 4 well-qualified individuals from Michigan to fill these vacancies.

The objections of the Michigan Senators are, in my view, unreasonable.

The basis of their complaint is that two nominees were left without hearings at the end of President Clinton's term in 2001.

They ignore the fact that two nominees were also left without hearings at the end of President Bush's term in 1993, which means that President Clinton got to appoint the same number of judges to the Sixth Circuit as the number of vacancies that came open during his presidency.

Both parties have left nominations pending at the end of Presidents' terms. But the effort by my Michigan colleagues to block nominations at the outset of a President's term is unheard of.

Five of the Sixth Circuit's active judges— nearly half —were appointed by President Clinton.

Let me read from the Grand Rapids Press. It makes the point well, saying, "The Constitution does not give [Sens. Levin and Stabenow] co-presidential authority and certainly does not support the use of the Court of Appeals to nurse a political grudge [Sens. Levin and Stabenow] have proposed that the president let a bipartisan commission make Sixth Circuit nominations or that Mr. Bush re-nominate the two lapsed Clinton nominations. Mr. Bush has shown no interest in either retreat from his constitutional prerogatives. Nor should he. Movement in this matter should come from Sens. Levin and Stabenow—and, clearly, it should be backward."

Mr. President, our courts can't work if we don't have judges to run them. And our communities suffer when our courts don't work -- victims, who never see justice, defendants who hang in limbo. And communities that go unprotected.

President Bush's judicial nominees deserve a simple up or down vote. That is all that is being asked. That is one of our most important Constitutional duties. We cannot use the system to nurse grudges. The consequences are too great. The public expects us to get do our duty. I call upon my fellow senators to exercise their Constitutional responsibilities and free the Michigan four.

I yield the floor.

On the Delayed Michigan Nominations to the 6th Circuit Court of Appeal

Wednesday, July 16, 2003

Mr. President, I rise this morning to address the dire situation that exists in the administration of justice for the people of Tennessee, Kentucky, Ohio, and Michigan – the states that make up the 6th Circuit of the United States Court of Appeals.

I am joined here this morning by other Senators from the 6th Circuit and most notably we are joined on the Senate floor by many members of the House of Representatives, representing these four states.

This morning we will be meeting with Michigan's Attorney General Mike Cox and several Michigan leaders who flew down today to make their case that the Senate of the United States should do its job and move forward with the stalled Michigan nominations to the 6th Circuit Court of Appeals. They will be presenting the Senate leadership with a petition of thousands of Michigan citizens asking the Senate to end the delay on the so-called Michigan 4.

This petition corresponds with a concurrent resolution which has been introduced in the Michigan legislature also asking the United States Senate to end the almost two year delay on the Michigan nominations.

The people and leaders of Michigan are not speaking for themselves only. They speak for all the people affected by the delay, and that includes the people of Tennessee, Kentucky, and Ohio.

That is why, Mr. President, last week I took the rare but not unprecedented action to file for the discharge of these four stalled nominations from the Judiciary Committee -- because the delay of these nominations affects more than the state of Michigan, and the entire 6th Circuit Congressional delegation has an interest on behalf of the people of the states and districts we represent.

In response to my discharge motion, my colleague, the senior Senator from Illinois, objected on behalf of the two senators from Michigan, on the basis that the stalled

Michigan nominations had not had a hearing. It was, I thought, an odd objection given that it is the senators from Michigan that are obstructing such hearings from being held.

Nevertheless, I respectfully considered the objection, and studied the record of the Michigan nominations, and this morning I have sent a letter to Chairman Hatch, together with Senator McConnell, asking him to hold hearings on these nominations as soon as possible.

Mr. President, I ask to submit this letter for the record.

I also ask to submit for the historical record, two letters from White House Counsel Alberto Gonzalez, outlining the history of these nominations.

Mr. President, after looking at the record, I have reached the conclusion that the objection to these nominees having hearings is based not on any substantive concerns about their qualifications, integrity, or temperament. Indeed, these four nominees are held in the highest regard and enjoy solid reputations. Nor is it based on a failure of the White House to properly consult with the Michigan senators. In fact, it appears that the Administration has been extremely solicitous of their views, having engaged in extensive and good faith consultation, as that term is properly understood.

Rather, based upon our review of the record of consultation and correspondence, it appears that the Michigan Senators object to consideration of these nominees for purposes unrelated to their personal qualifications. Simply put, they believe that two Clinton nominees from Michigan who were not confirmed should be renominated by President Bush. Because the White House has not taken the extraordinary step of renominating these two Clinton nominees, the Michigan Senators have decided to block all four of Michigan's circuit court nominees (and both of its district court nominees as well).

This is not a valid reason to hold the people of the entire Sixth Circuit hostage and inflict damage and delay on our constituents. This situation is unacceptable and simply cannot continue. The Michigan senators should not be able to prevent the entire Senate from acting on four outstanding nominees who would fill judicial emergencies on an appellate court that is operating with fully one fourth of its seats vacant.

I should note that one of these nominees, Judge Henry Saad, was first nominated by the first President Bush and was never given a hearing. He has been waiting, in effect, for over a decade. It bears noting that when he is confirmed by the Senate, Judge Saad will be the first Arab American to serve on the circuit courts.

Mr. President, the Constitution of the United States requires that the Senate to responsibly and expeditiously vote on the President's nominees – “yea” or “nay” – and allow the courts to get on with their work. Instead, what is happening is that the President's nominees to the Sixth Circuit are being held up and the Senate is blocked from performing its Constitutional duty.

Among the twelve United States Courts of Appeals, the Sixth Circuit is now dead last in the timeliness of its disposition of cases.

District court judges within the Sixth Circuit warn us that by having to perform regular duty as a substitute judge on the court of appeals, their own trial dockets have slowed considerably.

Only a substantial commitment on the part of the senior judges of the Sixth Circuit, district judges from within the Sixth Circuit, and visiting appellate judges from other circuits has kept the caseload even barely manageable. The Sixth Circuit is the third busiest court of appeals, and Chief Judge Boyce Martin has asked Congress to authorize a 17th judge for the court. The court would be overworked even if it had its full complement of 16 judges.

According to district judge Robert Bell (W.D. Michigan), “We’re having to backfill with judges from other circuits, who are basically substitutes. You don’t get the same sense of purpose and continuity you get with full-fledged court of appeals judges.” Furthermore, “we don’t have the time or the resources that the circuit court has. You can’t help to conclude that if we had 16 full-time judges with the full complement of staff, that each case might get more consideration...”

Those are very troubling words: “Each case might get more consideration.” It is unconscionable that we would deliberately allow our courts to get clogged up, backlogged, and undermined because some in the Washington wish to politicize the process. Our courts are supposed to be fair and impartial. They are supposed to serve both victims and defendants. We are undermining the rights of our fellow citizens if we do not resolve this issue.

And it's not just judges who are seeing what's happening. United States attorneys in Michigan tell us that the delays caused by the vacancies are complicating their ability to prosecute wrongdoers, defendants are able to commit more crime while awaiting trial, there is less consistency in the court's jurisprudence, and the United States is effectively being deprived of en banc review in some cases.

Subject: Can a Catholic be confirmed to US Appeals Court?

Dear fellow Catholics:

This is a call for solidarity among Catholics. President Bush nominated Alabama Attorney General William Pryor, a devout Catholic, for the US Court of Appeals. His confirmation in the Senate is being opposed mainly because he has answered the call of the Church to "faithful citizenship". We urgently need your help by calling your senators' offices right away. The timing is urgent. A vote is scheduled in the Judiciary committee on Thursday, July 10 and a full floor vote will follow closely behind on July 16.

Please forward this call for solidarity to your Catholic family, friends and neighbors.

During his confirmation hearing a couple weeks ago they asked Bill Pryor the expected stinging questions about his past criticism of Roe v Wade and his defense of the rights of the unborn. They really tried to make him squirm, but not Bill Pryor. "I stand by that comment," he told one senator. In case they didn't understand him, he clarified with another senator, "I believe that abortion is the taking of human life." The senators were stunned. Never had they heard such candor. They had run into Bill Pryor, a Catholic "faithful citizen".

The campaign to deny confirmation to this accomplished public servant with a stellar record of public service and competency in the law is now in full swing. After the hearing, opposing senators did something unheard of. They submitted to him over 250 complex legal questions requiring detailed, lengthy answers. That is harassment.

Personal phone calls to your two US Senators' offices are the only way to get Bill Pryor's nomination confirmed. Each call is critically important, because senators are not used to hearing from Catholic voters.

Please tell your senators' offices that you are a Catholic and you are asking for your senator to vote for his confirmation. Tell them Bill Pryor is an accomplished and honorable man that deserves to be seated on the Court of Appeals.

Bill Pryor is being opposed because his political life is led by a conscience informed by his Catholic faith. To deny him a seat on the appeals court would be a chilling precedent for this nation whose founding was informed by Judeo-Christian principles such as the understanding that rights, like the right to life, were an endowment from our Creator.

As Pope John Paul II has told us in an address to ambassadors from around the globe, “disqualifying the informed Christian conscience from political life would open the road to moral anarchy. ... The oppression of the weak by the strong would be the obvious consequence.” Oops—Isn’t that what abortion, euthanasia and embryonic research are all about?

To deny him a seat on the appeals court would be a chilling precedent for this nation whose founding was informed by Judeo-Christian principles such as the understanding that rights, like the right to life, were an endowment from our Creator.

As Pope John Paul II has told us in an address to ambassadors from around the globe, “disqualifying the informed Christian conscience from political life would open the road to moral anarchy. ... The oppression of the weak by the strong would be the obvious consequence.” Oops—Isn’t that what abortion, euthanasia and embryonic research are all about?

Subject: Can a Catholic be confirmed to US Appeals Court?

Dear fellow Catholics:

This is a call for solidarity among Catholics. President Bush nominated Alabama Attorney General William Pryor, a devout Catholic, for the US Court of Appeals. His confirmation in the Senate is being opposed mainly because he has answered the call of the Church to "faithful citizenship". We urgently need your help by calling your senators' offices right away. The timing is urgent. A vote is scheduled in the Judiciary committee on Thursday, July 10 and a full floor vote will follow closely behind on July 16.

Please forward this call for solidarity to your Catholic family, friends and neighbors.

During his confirmation hearing a couple weeks ago they asked Bill Pryor the expected stinging questions about his past criticism of Roe v Wade and his defense of the rights of the unborn. They really tried to make him squirm, but not Bill Pryor. "I stand by that comment," he told one senator. In case they didn't understand him, he clarified with another senator, "I believe that abortion is the taking of human life." The senators were stunned. Never had they heard such candor. They had run into Bill Pryor, a Catholic "faithful citizen".

The campaign to deny confirmation to this accomplished public servant with a stellar record of public service and competency in the law is now in full swing. After the hearing, opposing senators did something unheard of. They submitted to him over 250 complex legal questions requiring detailed, lengthy answers. That is harassment.

Personal phone calls to your two US Senators' offices are the only way to get Bill Pryor's nomination confirmed. Each call is critically important, because senators are not used to hearing from Catholic voters.

Please tell your senators' offices that you are a Catholic and you are asking for your senator to vote for his confirmation. Tell them Bill Pryor is an accomplished and honorable man that deserves to be seated on the Court of Appeals.

To find your senators and phone numbers for their Washington office, visit

If you wish to call your senators state offices, the number is listed in your local phone directory. Email members@yourcatholicvoice.org to let us know when you called your senators. Please list their names and any insights you may have gained from the call. We will not be able to acknowledge every email, but be assured your call will make a big difference in this process.

Re: DOJ-2019-001973
18-cv-02143 (D.D.C.)
VRB:TAZ:BPF

Senator Blumenthal:

When processing your Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) request dated August 8, 2018 for records related to Brett Kavanaugh, the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) referred two pages of material to this Office for processing and direct response to you. For your information, the CIA's administrative tracking number for this request is F-2018-02283, and the material was received by this Office by letter dated January 28, 2019.

I have determined that these two pages are appropriate for release with excisions made pursuant to Exemptions 3 and 6 of the FOIA, 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(3) and (b)(6), and copies are enclosed. Some of the excisions in these records are made on behalf of other entities, including the CIA and the Office of the Director of National Intelligence (ODNI). Exemption 3 pertains to information exempted from release by statute, in this instance 50 U.S.C. § 3024(m), which protects identifying information of ODNI personnel, and the CIA Act of 1949, 50 U.S.C. § 3507. Exemption 6 pertains to information the release of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of the personal privacy of third parties.

For your information, Congress excluded three discrete categories of law enforcement and national security records from the requirements of the FOIA. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(c) (2012 & Supp. V 2017). This response is limited to those records that are subject to the requirements of the FOIA. This is a standard notification that is given to all our requesters and should not be taken as an indication that excluded records do, or do not, exist.

If you have any questions regarding this response, please contact Gary Feldon of the Department's Civil Division, Federal Programs Branch, at 202-514-4686.

Sincerely,

Office of Legal Counsel

Washington, D.C. 20530

Sam Simon
Chief Counsel
Senator Richard Blumenthal, Ranking Member
Subcommittee on Oversight, Agency Action, Federal Rights, and Federal Courts
Committee on the Judiciary
United States Senate
Washington, DC 20510

Re: FOIA Tracking No. FY18-178; Blumenthal v. NARA, D.D.C. No. 18-cv-2143

Dear Mr. Simon:

This letter partially responds to your August 8, 2018 Freedom of Information Act ("FOIA") request to the Office of Legal Counsel ("OLC") and others on behalf of ten members of the Senate Judiciary Committee, seeking four categories of records "involving Brett Kavanaugh during his time as an associate in the White House Counsel's office from January 2001 to July 2003 and as White house Staff Secretary from July 2003 to May 2006." As you know, the request is also the subject of the above-captioned litigation.

As agreed through counsel, OLC is now processing those responsive records in which Brett Kavanaugh was a direct participant appearing in the fourth of the "Priority Tiers" as identified by your counsel on September 21, 2018. Since the last letter in this matter, OLC has processed 141 records totaling 285 pages. We have enclosed 42 records totaling 52 pages with redactions pursuant to FOIA Exemption Five, 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(5), or FOIA Exemption Six, 5 U.S.C. § 552(b)(6). For your information, Exemption Five exempts material protected by the attorney-client, deliberative process, and presidential communications privileges, as well as the attorney work product doctrine and other privileges. Exemption Six exempts material the disclosure of which would constitute a clearly unwarranted invasion of personal privacy.

We have referred 28 records, totaling 58 pages, to three other entities for direct response to you. We have referred 15 records totaling 24 pages to the Office of Information Policy, which may be reached as follows: Douglas Hibbard, Chief, Initial Request Staff, Office of Information Policy, Department of Justice, Suite 11050, 1425 New York Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20530, Tel: (202) 514-FOIA. We have referred 7 records totaling 18 pages to the National Archives and Records Administration, which may be reached as follows: Gary M. Stern; 8601 Adelphi Road, Room 3110; College Park, MD 20740-6001; Tel: 301-837-3642. We have referred 6 records totaling 16 pages to the Department of the Treasury, which may be reached as follows: FOIA Request; Department of the Treasury; Washington, DC 20220; Tel: 202-622-0930.

Finally, we have withheld in full the remaining 71 records totaling 175 pages pursuant to Exemption Five. We have determined that none of the withheld material is appropriate for discretionary release. We are continuing to process responsive records.

For your information, Congress excluded three discrete categories of law enforcement and national security records from the requirements of the FOIA. See 5 U.S.C. § 552(c). This response is limited to those records that are subject to the requirements of the FOIA. This is a standard notification that is given to all our requesters and should not be taken as an indication that excluded records do, or do not, exist.

Your counsel may contact Stephen Pezzi of the Civil Division, Federal Programs Branch, at 202-305-8576 or at stephen.pezzi@usdoj.gov, to discuss any aspect of your request. Additionally, you may contact the Office of Government Information Services (“OGIS”) at the National Archives and Records Administration to inquire about the FOIA mediation services they offer. The contact information for OGIS is as follows: Office of Government Information Services, National Archives and Records Administration, Room 2510, 8601 Adelphi Road, College Park, Maryland 20740-6001, e-mail at ogis@nara.gov; telephone at 202-741-5770; toll free at 1-877-684-6448; or facsimile at 202-741-5769.

Although your request is the subject of ongoing litigation, and administrative appeals are not ordinarily acted upon in such situations, I am required by statute and regulation to inform you of your right to file an administrative appeal. You may administratively appeal by writing to the Director, Office of Information Policy (“OIP”), United States Department of Justice, Suite 11050, 1425 New York Avenue, NW, Washington, DC 20530-0001, or you may submit an appeal through OIP’s FOIAonline portal by creating an account on the following web site: <https://foiaonline.regulations.gov/foia/action/public/home>. Your appeal must be postmarked or electronically transmitted within 90 days of the date of my response to your request. If you submit your appeal by mail, both the letter and the envelope should be clearly marked “Freedom of Information Act Appeal.”

Sincerely,

Paul P. Colborn

In case you don't already have it, I'm forwarding herewith the Burton committee website summary of its interest in the subpoenaed documents, which Burton cites at footnote 1 of his 1/3/02 letter as part of the committee's showing of need for the documents.

Central Intelligence Agency

Washington, D.C. 20505

23 September 2019

Elizabeth France
American Oversight
1030 15th Street Northwest, B255
Washington, DC 20005

Re: F-2018-02283; Civil Action No. 18-cv-2143

Dear Ms. France:

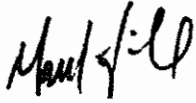

The Central Intelligence Agency (CIA) referred six (6) documents belonging to the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) on March 01, 2019. Pursuant to Department of Justice guidance (http://www.justice.gov/oip/foia_updates/Vol_XIV_3/page4.htm), OMB alternatively handled the referral as a coordination and provided its release determinations to the CIA on September 16, 2019 for proper treatment and release of its documents.

This is a final response on behalf of OMB to the 08 August 2018 Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) request submitted by your clients, Richard Blumenthal, et al., for the following records involving Brett Kavanaugh during his time as an associate in the White House Counsel's office from January 2001 to July 2003 and as White House Staff Secretary from July 2003 to May 2006:

1. All records, including but not limited to emails, memoranda, print or other correspondence, notices, attachments, and directives addressed to, from, carbon copying (cc'ing), or blind carbon copying (bcc'ing) Mr. Kavanaugh.
2. All records, including but not limited to emails, memoranda, correspondence, notices, and directives, discussing or mentioning Mr. Kavanaugh.
3. Records relating to Mr. Kavanaugh's nomination to the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit.
4. To the extent they are not included in response to categories (1) through (3), all records containing documents written by, edited by, prepared in whole or part by, under the supervision of, or at the direction of Mr. Kavanaugh, as well as documents referencing Mr. Kavanaugh by name, initials, or title, and documents received by or sent to him.

The six (6) documents may be released in segregable form with redactions made on the basis of FOIA exemptions (b)(5) and (b)(6). This concludes the OMB response to the referenced request.

Sincerely,
